

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

THE UNITED EAST INDIA COMPANY.

Honourable Sirs,

I HAVE taken the liberty of dedicating to you the following Sanscrit and English Dictionary, as a public mark of the respect which I entertain for your Honourable Court, and as a public acknowledgement of those obligations which I owe to several of its individual members.

At the same time that I avail myself of this opportunity to gratify my personal feelings, I am satisfied that I shall find an apology for so doing, in the occasion that offers them to your notice, and that you will receive their expression favourably, in consideration of the work which they introduce to your attention.

Whatever may be the merits of the Dictionary now published, it may claim at least the credit of purposed utility, and of a design to promote those measures, by which the welfare and happiness of British India can best be ascertained and secured.

It is an assertion that scarcely requires proof, that the Hindu population of these extensive realms can be understood only through the medium of the Sanscrit language: it alone furnishes us with the master spring of all their actions and passions, their prejudices and their errors, and enables us to appreciate their vices or their worth: without this knowledge therefore the kindest intentions and wisest designs for their happiness and amelioration, will often prove, as they have often proved, abortive, and even where successful, will attain success, only by a prodigal waste of time and exertion, occasioned by the wrong direction of laudable zeal, and the idle opposition of unnecessary doubt and absurd misapprehension.

Where then the happiness of millions is at stake, it needs no force of language to urge the weight of every measure, that in any degree contributes to so important an end; still less must it be necessary, when as in the present instance, events as unexampled as wonderful have made that happiness our peculiar duty, and have committed the destinies of India, to the care of an association of Englishmen, with whose good name as well as commercial interests your Honourable Court is intrusted.

The value of the Sanscrit language, as an object of literary curiosity, is of no moment, compared with its importance in the light in which it must be viewed, by all who duly consider its connexion with the welfare of this country: in itself however it is not undeserving of consideration, and the patronage bestowed by the ruling power of a state on the liberal studies of its subjects, is not without its usefulness or reward: on both accounts, therefore, I am confident, you will think the study of the Sanscrit language in the Company's Indian territories, entitled to your protection and encouragement, and will not be displeased with the attempt to facilitate its acquirement, to which I have presumed to prefix your names.

I have the honour to be,

HONOURABLE SIRS,

Your most obedient Servant,

H. H. WILSON.

CALCUTTA,
October, 1819.

P R E F A C E.

THE cultivation of the Sanskrit language by European scholars, has been hitherto much impeded, by the absence of such assistance as that which is now proffered them. The elements of the language, have been fully and distinctly developed and explained, and they have been studied in a few instances, with a zeal proportioned to the difficulty of the task, and a success that could scarcely have been anticipated, from the arduousness of the attempt, and inadequacy of the means: in general, however, the want of a Dictionary has tended to deter application, and retard advancement, and has proved a serious obstacle to the intimate and extended acquirement of a language, which holds a most important place in literary history, and should be an object of primary interest, to all who are charged with the government and happiness of Hindus.

To supply a deficiency, as fatal to nascent curiosity, as embarrassing to study more advanced, the present translation of an extensive original compilation has been prepared. The original work, was commenced shortly after the institution of the College of Fort William, for the use of which it was designed, being evidently connected with the objects and interests of that excellent establishment. Having been necessarily entrusted to native scholars, and being a task not very familiar to their literary habits, it is not surprising that much time should have been expended upon its execution, and that a delay more than commensurate with the extent and value of the work, should have occurred: it was not finished till the year 1809, under the final superintendence of the late RAGHUMANI BHATTACHARYA; and then constituted, although far from complete, the only compilation in the Sanskrit language to which the name of Dictionary could with propriety be applied.

The Cōshas of the Sanskrit Lexicographers, of which the best, the Amera Cōsha, has been published with a translation, by Mr. COLEBROOKE, are with a few exceptions mere vocabularies: their contents are classed according to analogy of import, and distributed into sections or chapters, according to the judgement or fancy of the author, and the synonymes of each signification are then strung together in a metrical combination, in which they take the situation that rhythm and quantity prescribe. The inconveniences of this arrangement are obvious: it is not always easy in the first instance to know in what division of the work, the word we are in quest of is to be found; when this is ascertained, the discovery of the stanza or line in which it occurs, is an occupation of some time and trouble, and when in imagination we have reached the goal, and attained the situation where the object of our search should be, the amalgamation of Sanscrit vocables, by the laws of Sandhi, or the euphonous combination of letters, frequently renders the extraction of the individual term, a task that requires more skill and experience than a student, nay, even a Pāṇḍit, is found to possess. This last difficulty is of invariable occurrence, but in some Cōshas, and in the Nānārt'ha chapters of all, or those chapters which treat of words possessing various senses, an approach is made to an alphabetical arrangement and the form of a Dictionary. The alphabetical arrangement, however, is in some cases only partial, as in the Amera Cōsha, where words terminating with the same final letter are contiguously placed, but they are then disposed at random: in others, as in Ajayapāla, the initial letter is the connective characteristic; but there, as in the former case, the arrangement goes no farther. In the Méḍinī again, which is exclusively appropriated to homonymous terms, a methodical system is adopted, perplexing from its fastidious exactness. The vocables are in that compilation arranged, first, according to their final letters; they are then classed agreeably to the number of syllables they contain, and they are then placed in an order, which is in general strictly alphabetical. The method adopted in the Méḍinī, of arranging words according to their final letters and syllabic extent, is the prevailing plan of the Nānārt'ha Cōshas, but that work, and the last chapter of Hémachandra, are the only ones in which much attention is paid to their subsequent disposition, and these vocabularies therefore, although consulted with more facility, than those which are described above, still present many difficulties to the practised scholar, and are of little value or advantage to the early student. The Sanscrit vocabularies still in use are in considerable number: they repeat each other of course, but each has in general made some additions to the labours of its predecessors, and is consequently deserving of reference; the words of the language are thus scattered through a variety of authorities, none of which can be readily consulted or understood with ease.

To collect these different authorities into one compilation, and arrange their united contents in an accessible shape, were the objects of the work undertaken for the use of the College; and to these were added, the citation of the authority, and the synonymes there given, the specification of the genders of nouns, and the etymological analysis. It was written in the Bengáli character, and occupied four large folio volumes.

A copy of the Dictionary thus described, came into my possession shortly after I commenced my Sanscrit studies, and I anticipated the most valuable assistance to them from such a source. I found, however, that it comprehended in its etymological details, and lengthened quotations of synonymies, much more than I then required, and that from its unwieldy size it was inconvenient and embarrassing in use. I therefore effected its conversion into a more commodious form, and prepared a translation of its abbreviated contents for my private reference. I state these circumstances to obviate the charge of presumption in engaging at so early a period, and with such inadequate powers, in a task of this nature, and for undertaking which at all this explanation will account—I may further add, that even at this time, I was encouraged in the attempt, by the approbation of the late zealous and accomplished orientalist Doctor JOHN LEYDEN, whose own unwearied ardour in the prosecution of Asiatic literature, delighted to cherish in others the faintest dawn of a congenial spirit.

Upon the completion of my task, circumstances led to the communication of its results to Mr. COLEBROOKE, a name, which in Hindu literature and science carries with it a weight and authority that all must bow to, and by his advice, I was induced to revise my labours, and to hope that they might be rendered serviceable to the study of Sanskrit lore. How far that hope is likely to be realised, depends now upon the opinion of the Public, but it may be necessary to the accuracy of its decision, to be apprised of the intentions I proposed to effect, and the means I had of executing them; so that I may not be unjustly censured for failing in a project I never entertained, or imperfectly accomplishing a task that my materials were incompetent to perform.

The preparation of the Dictionary as it now appears, rendered my first work of no practical utility, especially as in the course of the first translation, it had not occurred to me to question or verify the correctness of my original. I had therefore to re-commence my labours, and carefully to collate the compilation of RAGHUMANI, with the authorities on which it rested, and it soon appeared, that accuracy was no part of the compiler's merits: the mistakes were innumerable, and of every kind; words incorrectly written and erroneously interpreted, fanciful etymologies covering and sanctioning those errors, passages wrongly cited, and the names of the original vocabularies constantly confounded, met me in every page, and the adjustment of these inaccuracies, added to the difficulty inseparable from a reference to such unmethodical guides as the Sanskrit Cūshas, has rendered the business of collation the most laborious and harassing portion of my task: fortunately it was a duty in which my native assistants were best employed, and they have been especially so occupied: to those who are acquainted with the character of these assistants, it is needless to expatiate upon the necessity of vigilantly superintending and revising, whatever they do, and it would be difficult to convey to a person not acquainted with them, any conception of their carelessness and indolence, and of the limited dependance to be placed upon native research, when not sedulously and unremittingly controuled. I have had in the course of my labours the aid of many Pandits of high credit and respectable attainments, and regret much, that I cannot associate the name of any one of them, with my own, as a partner in the little credit, I may hope to derive, from the present publication.

The plan of the original compilation including the contents of the vocabularies alone, left the work exceedingly defective: the Roots of the language are all excluded from those collections, as are most technical terms; and words of common occurrence, and none of these accordingly were comprised in RAGHUMANI's Dictionary. I am disposed indeed to question the expedience of the primary plan, and to conceive that a more useful Lexicon might have been drawn up from the classical compositions of the best Hindu writers, instead of deriving it from the Cóshas only. At the same time, as these last are the received authorities of all India, and as the interpretations resting on general writings may be contested; as they are also perpetually cited in the ablest commentaries, and their omission might have given undue importance to their supposed contents; it was absolutely necessary to comprehend, as many of them as were procurable, within the scope of the work: to have added to these authorities, the general body of Hindu compositions would have involved an amount of labour, cost and time, and a voluminous extent of preparation which the state of Sanscrit study does not yet require, and perhaps does not permit, and it is therefore, with some hesitation that I suggest any objections to the original plan: to remedy its deficiencies at all, was obviously not incumbent upon one who appeared in the humble character of Translator only, and I should have been justified therefore in confining the limits of my Translation to those of the original: as some of its omissions were however of importance, I felt myself bound to supply them, and I have made very considerable additions to the original work: these additions were such as were most obviously useful, and particularly include the whole number of the Radicals of the language, but I shall not pause here, to offer a more detailed notice of them, as their specification will more consistently occur under the description, I shall now proceed to give, of the sources, whence not only they, but the contents of the entire work, are derived.

The authorities cited in the original compilation, and collated in the course of translation, are for the greater part the same as those enumerated in the preface to Mr. COLEBROOKE's translation of the Amera Cósha. The text of that work employed on the present occasion, is that of his very accurate edition, and I have been indebted to him for the copies of the different commentaries consulted by him in his translation, and which were handed over to me, with the ready liberality, which has always characterised that distinguished scholar. To his account therefore of these works, I might be contented to refer, but, as I hope to add something to the limited knowledge we possess of the author of the Amera Cósha, and, as I have to notice several works not adverted to by Mr. COLEBROOKE. I have thought it advisable to include the whole in the enumeration of my authorities, and thus bring into one view, all the information we possess at present of those writers, who are celebrated as lexicographers by the Hindus.

The Amera Cōsha, or vocabulary of AMERA SINHA, is a compilation too well known in Europe, to need any particular description. It is in India the vocabulary most generally celebrated, and of the widest circulation, being a work of unquestionable authority, in all the schools, and with every sect. The author by his appellation Sinha, would seem to have belonged to the Cshetriya or military tribe, but it may merely designate his eminence, in which sense it is often conjoined to words: in like manner, though in AMERA DĒVA, another appellation by which he is known, the latter term is a Brahmanical surname, yet it may be merely an epithet alluding to his superior or divine merit. He is generally, and apparently with reason, considered to have been a follower of Buddha, although this is denied by one of his late commentators, RAMASRAMA, and all tradition concurs, in enumerating him amongst the learned men, who in the metaphorical phraseology of the Hindus, are denominated the 'nine gems' of the court of VICRAMADITYA.

The era at which the author of the Amera Cōsha flourished, connected as it is by these long and universally current traditions, with a period of peculiar splendour in the literary annals of India, is an object of profound interest: to ascertain it within any reasonable bounds would fix the date of a number of celebrated compositions, whose age is involved at present in utter obscurity, and would determine the time, and existence, of a monarch, of whom, notwithstanding he furnishes an epoch by which Hindu dates are still regulated, the accounts are contradictory and perplexed: how far it is practicable to effect this object, will best appear from the following considerations, the extent of which will find a sufficient excuse, in the important associations which are involved in the result.

Authorities which assert the contemporary existence of AMERA and VICRAMADITYA, might be indefinitely multiplied, and those are equally numerous, which class him amongst the 'nine gems.' The specification of these worthies, including the name of AMERA SINHA, occurs however in a verse, which appears in a great measure traditional only, as I have not been able to trace it to any authentic source, although it is in the mouth of every Pandit, when interrogated on the subject. It has been published by Mr. BENTLEY, in his Essay on the Hindu systems of Astronomy, in the 8th volume of the Asiatic Researches, and as it is sufficient for the purposes of the present enquiry, I shall here insert it.

ख्यातो वरह मिच्छिरे दपते स्मार्वा रत्नानि वैवस्वतिर्नर विक्रमस्य ।

DRANWANTARI, CSHAPANACA, AMERA SINHA, S'ANCU, VETALA BHATTĀ, GHATĀCARPARA, CALIDĀSA, the celebrated VARĀHA MIHIRA, and VARARUCHI, were the nine gems in the court of the monarch VICRAMA.

From the identity of some, of the names, contained in the above stanza, with some which occur in a work entitled the BHOJA PRABANDHA, a collection of literary anecdotes relating to the prince of Dhārā named BHOJA; and from its being undoubtedly true, that the term VICRAMA is a title, rather than a proper name, and applied in Indian history to many different princes, it has been inferred, that the VICRAMA mentioned in the stanza, is either BHOJA himself or his immediate successor, whose name is said to have been VICRAMA, and that the nine gems, flourished during the reigns of these two princes, "being first in the council of Rāja BHOJA, and afterwards in that of VICRAMADITYA, his successor.† The reign of BHOJA is placed by Mr. BENTLEY, at the end of the tenth, and beginning of the eleventh century, or from 982 to 1082;‡ and by Major WILFORD, BHOJA's death is placed in the year 977 or 982 at latest.§ In either case, if AMERA, and the other writers enumerated in the verse, were contemporary with BHOJA, the golden age of Hindu literature will be transferred from the century preceding the Christian era to which it is usually referred, or the commencement of the era of VICRAMADITYA, to a comparatively, modern period, and be not much more than eight centuries remote.

The accuracy of this conclusion, opposed as it is by the concurring and consistent traditions of the country, and by a belief that has existed, unaltered and unassailed for many centuries, cannot be unhesitatingly admitted, especially when upon investigation it appears to have been advanced upon grounds of a slight and frail texture in themselves, and loosely or partially examined.

The first subject of doubt is the authenticity and weight of the stanza, which is given to us, as the authority for the contemporary existence of the individuals it particularises; no mention is made of the work whence it is extracted, nor the writer to whom it is ascribed, nor are we furnished with any data by which to judge of the claims it possesses on our credit. In truth, it appears to be little more than traditionary, as although familiar to every Pandit, I never met with one who could tell me its origin or author. It is attributed by some to the Vicrama Cheritra, but they have only asserted this upon report, and I have not been able to procure a copy of that work in order to verify the assertion; it may be doubted indeed whether the entire work exists, as Major WILKES at Benares, could not meet with it, and was indebted to extracts supplied by Colonel MACKENZIE from an imperfect manuscript, procured in the Peninsula.* If the statement be correct, however, it adds but little strength to the argument, as the Vicrama Cheritra, like the Sinhāsana Dwātrīṃśati, and Vedāla Panchavīṃśati, is a collection of mere fables, and of no historical weight. As a composition of a comparatively modern date, it is probably a mere transcript of some popular tradition in the list of VICRAMADITYA's nine gems; and we are therefore obliged to assail this tradition, with the instruments itself supplies, and derive from traditionary evidence our only proof, that all such evidence is unworthy of belief. If the verse under discussion be a proof, that AMERA was the contemporary of any of the literary characters there named, it proves also that he was contemporary with Rāja VICRAMA, and in order to be consistent in the argument which reduces AMERA's antiquity, it becomes necessary to affix the name of the monarch to some other than the original VICRAMADITYA to whom it is usually assigned: that the enumeration is not entirely accurate, may be inferred from its comprising VARARUCHI as well as AMERA; as the former is considered by the commentators as one of AMERA's authorities, and necessarily therefore his predecessor, but as it is consistent with general belief, we need not place any stress on this exception. That by VICRAMA however is intended either Rāja BHOJA or his successor, may confidently be denied.

* Asiatic Researches VIII. 242. It may be observed, that in this verse, as printed in the Researches the name of GHATĀCARPARA is misspelt, GHATĀCARPU'RA: the name is itself a poetical one, and the meaning of it with the passage in which it originally occurs are given in Mr. COLEBROOKE's Essay on Sanscrit and Pracrit Poetry, Asiatic Researches X. 402.

The principal argument for placing the nine writers in the court of BHOJA, is supposed to be furnished by the Bhoja Prabandha, a work in which, it is said, that the nine gems are stated to have flourished under that prince, and that they are specified as the very persons named in the list above cited: assertions of which the first is untrue, and the second but partially correct.

The Bhoja Prabandha is a work of no estimation nor authority: its purport is the commemoration of the liberal patronage which men of letters experienced from BHOJA, the sovereign of Dhānā or Dhar in Malwa, and it introduces a number of the most celebrated writers in India, as interlocutors in short dialogues with each other, or with the prince, in which they are supposed to display peculiar readiness of wit, brilliancy of imagination, or beauty of expression. It might have been conceived to hold the character of a Sanscrit anthology, or a collection of

'Elegant Extracts' had not the author neglected the variety of characteristic selection, for the sameness of original composition: according to Mr. BENTLEY it was written by VALLAL SENA,* a prince who lived in the twelfth century† Mr. WARD says, it was written by BHOJA himself which is an evident inaccuracy:‡ one copy in my possession agrees so far with the first of these statements, as to term the writer VALLALA PANDITA, but another, and a more correct copy denominates him VALLABHA PANDITA: the last is a name of no note, nor are any data given for conjecturing his age, but, from the names of authors contained in the work, whose dates are ascertained; it is clear that VALLABHA PANDITA, if a correct appellation of the writer, could not have composed it earlier, than the age of VALLALA SENA and neither of these authors therefore can be supposed peculiarly well qualified to report conversations, which they describe as having been held some centuries before; and the whole is a fiction of no historical value; if any weight can be attached to it, it can only be supposed as intended to give an account of the writers who were distinguished in the three or four centuries preceding the author's own time, and cannot be admitted as an accurate notice of those of any particular age or reign: we have proofs of this indeed in the cotemporary association of individuals, who we know lived at distant intervals, and MAHESWARA whose date is A. D. 1111, and MADHAVA who wrote about A. D. 1340, are both present in the court of BHOJA, who himself died at the latest in 1082; such being the consistency and the accuracy of a record, which has been supposed to establish for the works of "VARAHA, AMARA SINHA, CALIDAS, and VARARUCHI an antiquity of little more than seven hundred years."

The general unfitness of the BHOJA PRABANDHA to be regarded as an authority, which has thus been pointed out, might be sufficient to show, that no inference of AMARA's existing at BHOJA's court as drawn from that work, is entitled to our attention; but as an object of literary discussion, and to shew the spirit in which some part of this enquiry has been conducted, I must be permitted to dwell a little longer on the subject.

The most correct copy of the work I have been able to procure, and which was brought by my friend Captain PRICE, from Benares, I have perused with the closest attention. In no part of it is it asserted that there were "nine gems" at BHOJA's court, nor do the names of more than two of those nine gems occur in it: individually and successively introduced as interlocutors in the dialogue, the different writers are very numerous, but amongst them, the only name that occurs in the stanza above given, is that of CA'LIDĀSA: we have however in the following enumeration of BHOJA's learned men one other appellation which may be identified with one in the verse :

अथ धारनगरे नकोपि मूर्ख निवसति । क्रमेण पञ्चशतानि सेवन्ते विदुषां श्रीभोजं ।
वारुचिस्तु बन्धुबाणमयूर समदेवहरिवंश
शङ्करकलिङ्ग कर्पूरविनायकमदनविद्याविनोदकोकिलतारेन्द्रप्रमुखाः ।

" Then there was no blockhead in the city Dhārā, but five hundred learned men severally attended on SRI BHOJA, as VARARUCHI, SUBANDHU, VĀNA, MAYŪRA, RĀMADEVĀ, HARIVANŚA, SANCARA, CALINGA, CARPŪRA, VINAYACA, MADANA, VIDYĀVINODA, COCILA, TĀRENDRA, and others," a very different series of names, and authors, from the 'nine gems' we have enumerated, with the single apparent exception of VARARUCHI.

It is now perfectly well understood, that in India, identity of name is by no means identity of person, and that the celebrity of any particular denomination, is the cause of its being assumed by many besides its original possessor. In the history of the Mogul empire in Hindustan, many Vicramādityas or Bickermajits are found amongst their tributary Rājās, and at this moment, many Calidāsas are to be met with in India, poets, and at the courts of men of opulence and rank, as if they expected to inherit with these attributes of their illustrious prototype, some sparks of his divine spirit: that there were at least two eminent bards of this name, is the general opinion of Hindu scholars, and the belief is borne out by the internal evidence of the compositions ascribed to CA'LIDĀSA, which have every mark of having been written at different periods, both of time and taste. The existence of a CA'LIDĀSA at the court of BHOJA is therefore no argument against AMERA's being contemporary with another bard of that name, or to their both having flourished long anterior to the reign of that prince.

That the name of VARARUCHI, has in like manner been applied to different individuals, might fairly be inferred from the practice thus described; but we have in this case a remarkable confirmation of our conjectures, and find, from the varying statements of several writers, that two, if not three, persons of this denomination, are celebrated in the literary history of the Hindus.

In the Ca'ḥā Sarit Sāgara, the same work in substance as the Vrihat Ca'ḥā, and by the same author, SOMADEVA, who declares that his abridgement has omitted, no essential part of his own original, the ancient grammarian, CA'TYA'YANA, is said to be the same person as VARARUCHI, and to be called indiscriminately by either name: the opening of this work, in the usual style of Hindu story telling, introduces us to superhuman agency: a demi-god named PUSHPADANTA, an attendant upon ŚRĪA, has incurred the displeasure of his irascible mistress DURGĀ, and is condemned to expiate his offence by wearing for a certain time the human form; in obedience to this sentence, he appears upon earth as a learned Brahman, named indifferently CĀTYĀYANA or VARARUCHI, ततः समन्त्यै बभूवा पुष्पदन्तः परिधमन् नाम्ना बरहृषिः किञ्च कात्यायन इति श्रुतः ॥

Proceeding a few pages, we find CĀTYĀYANA narrating his story to the Brahmans, VYĀRĪ, and INDRA DATTA, and he tells them that his birth was proclaimed by a voice from heaven, in the following stanza :

नाम्ना बरहृषिर्लोके तत्तदस्मै येचने । यद्यद्वरं भवेत् किञ्चिदित्युक्त्वा बाणपारमम् ॥

A SRUTADHARA is born, who shall acquire knowledge from VERSHA (a foolish Brahman so named) and shall give perfection to grammatical science amongst men : something of whatever is excellent (varam) shines (rochaté) in him, and therefore he shall be known in the world by the name VARARUCHI : having thus spoken the voice ceased.

That VARARUCHI, alias CĀTYĀYANA, was a different person from the VARARUCHI of BHOJA'S court, will scarcely be disputed: the latter is regarded as the Purohit, or family priest of the monarch, and is little known as an author: he is said to have written the Bhoja Champu in conjunction with his royal master, and to have completed the work after that prince's death: he is also known as the maternal uncle of SUBANDHU, the author of the Vāsavadattā, a tale, which that author appears to have modernised, and which in its older form, and with different names, is told in the Vṛihat Cat'hā, and is also alluded to by CĀLIDĀSA* and BHAVABHUTI, who consequently are prior to SUBANDHU, and who might have been contemporary or nearly so with his uncle. This VARARUCHI must therefore be a very different character from VARARUCHI or CĀTYĀYANA, the grammarian, one of PĀNINI'S earliest commentators, the author of the Vārtica, of the Prācīn Manorama, and possibly of the work which is enumerated by the commentators on Amerā amongst the authorities of that vocabulary: they indeed reckon amongst those authorities CĀTYĀYANA also, and consequently make a distinction between these two writers: it is possible that they are correct, but the discrepancy that thus occurs between the two accounts, is favourable to the present enquiry, as it renders it probable that we have three VARARUCHIS instead of one, and at least furnishes a positive proof, that the name is far from being the exclusive property, of the person noticed in the Bhoja Prabandha.

It may indeed be asserted, that the Cat'hā Sarit Sāgara, or rather the Vṛihat Cat'hā, is not a much better guide than the Bhoja Prabandha, and that a collection of idle tales is bad historical evidence: it must be remembered however that those tales are not of SOMADÉVA's invention: he has only the merit of telling them in his own way, and of having collected them together from various quarters: thus we have most of the legends relating to VĪCRAMA, which constitute the Sinkāsana Dvātrīṃśati, and Vetāla Panchavīṃśati, and we have also a very considerable portion of the Hitopadeśa, or Panchatantra, comprised in this selection: such as the tales are, therefore, they are of remote origin and existence, and are at least faithful records of the state of popular belief many ages ago: the compilation itself is of some antiquity: Major WILFORD states that it is considered to be between 6 and 700 years old, and this antiquity is corroborated by the mention* of the work made by GOVERDDHANA, the author of the Sapta Sati, who flourished probably in the twelfth century—now seven centuries would bring the Vṛihat Cat'hā, very near to the reign of BHOJA himself, and if the date of that reign has been ascertained with any correctness, the prince and his minister must have been characters familiar to the recollection of the author; that they were so, and consequently not yet objects of traditionary fiction, may be inferred from no notice being taken of them in any of the fables contained in the collection: at all events, if there had been a VARARUCHI in BHOJA's court, it is not likely that at so recent a period, he should have been confounded with the ancient grammarian CATYAYANA, nor would SOMADÉVA, or any of the old fablers, have asserted, what all their contemporaries could contradict, that BHOJA's VARARUCHI lived prior to the birth of SATAVAHANA or SALIVAHANA the founder of the Saka era, an antiquity which is assigned to him in one of the early chapters of the Vṛihat Cat'hā: whatever therefore we may think of VARARUCHI and CATYAYANA being identified, it is very clear that a writer of the former name, did precede the VARARUCHI, who appears to have flourished in the reign of BHOJA, and the earlier of the two is most probably intended by the tradition which makes him the contemporary of VĪCRAMA, and AMERA SINHA.

I have thus shewn that the supposed co-incidence of the persons, in the verse which assigns the 'nine gems' to VĪCRAMA, and those enumerated in the Bhoja Prabandha, has no satisfactory existence, and that except in the two doubtful cases I have specified, has no existence at all:

औरमायण भारत वृक्षयानां कवीन्द्रमकुमः ।

विज्ञाना इव सारसः खनी स्फुरन्तैर्भिन्ना

thus rendered by SIR WILLIAM JONES, we do homage to the poets who composed, the Rāmāyan, the Mahābhārat and the Vṛihatcat'hā, by whom delightful eloquence blazes forth divided like the river with three streams.

as far therefore as depends upon the Bhoja Prabandha, we have no reason to consider its hero as the same prince with the VICRAMA of the verse, nor that Amera Sinha lived at so comparatively recent a period as his reign. That the latter was not the case, however, we have other and probable testimony.

An inscription found by Mr. WILKINS at Buddha Gayá, of which he published a translation in the Asiatic Researches,* and which was written to commemorate the foundation of a temple of Buddha by AMERA SINHA, bears the date 1005 of the era of VICRAMA'DITYA, answering to the Christian year 949: the authenticity of this inscription we have no reason to question, as it professes no object to which suspicion of fraud or interest can be attached, and it is perfectly consistent with the character and traditions of the place in which it was found: the identity of the person is also indisputable, as all ancient accounts concur in representing AMERA as a worshipper of BUDDHA, and he is designated in the inscription, in the usual manner, as one of the nine gems of VICRAMA'DITYA'S COURT.

Admitting therefore the testimony of this record, it follows, that AMERA SINHA was a person of some celebrity prior to the date given in it, or A. D. 949, and it is not likely therefore that he should be cotemporary with BHOJA, who had scarcely commenced his reign according to Major WILFORD'S theory, or who did not ascend the throne till 30 years subsequent according to Mr. BENTLEY'S view of the subject. In fact however the tenor of the inscription renders either equally impossible, since that absolutely authorises our placing AMERA, long anterior to the period of its composition. The author states his having derived his knowledge of AMERA'S being the founder of the temple, from its records, or as it is translated "from the authority of the place," an authority which no doubt existed, as most celebrated shrines are furnished with a legend, a lying one it may be granted, which professes to give their history; and it matters not here, of what description was the record of the temple of BUDDHA, as if in the middle of the tenth century, it had converted AMERA SINHA into the hero of a holy fable it at least proves his prior and remote existence. To return to the inscription: the writer states, that "AMERA was the favourite and minister of VICRAMA'DITYA, who was certainly a king renowned in the world," and whom he intends by VICRAMA'DITYA, can scarcely be doubted, as he dates from that prince's era: it is therefore perfectly clear that at so distant a period as A. D. 949, if the inscription is to be trusted, the same traditionary account of AMERA'S date prevailed, which is still received, and however accurate or incorrect this tradition may have been, its existence is fatal to the supposition that the subject of it was alive at the period when such a belief was current, and still more so to the opinion we have noticed, of his flourishing at some subsequent date. That the inscription is worthy of credit, I see no reason to doubt, and it is assuredly an authority of more weight, than the notions of nameless Pandits,* the sole impugnors of the belief it sanctions.

The certainty that AMERA SINHA lived before the time of BHOJA, and the inference fairly deducible from the only positive record we possess, of his living long before that period, leave us still in doubt, as to the precise time at which he flourished. Tradition, uniform and consistent, and as we see by the inscription, and as we know from other testimonies, of unvarying tenor for seven or eight centuries, places him in the court of VICRAMADITYA, in the origin of the Samvat era, or 56 years before CHRIST: an antiquity far from unreasonable or improbable, although deemed by modern scepticism too remote: the only grounds on which this unbelief could ever have rested, the authority of the Bhoja Prabandha, I have shewn to be untenable, and I cannot therefore conceive the argument by which it can further be supported: the dispute to use the words of 'HARRIS' on a similar topic, appears to arise from the disputants running into the opposite vice of incredulity, in order to avoid being thought credulous for even in his day there was occasion to notice a defect, which is outrageously conspicuous in the writers of the present, when ancient India is their theme, "and whose opposition to the many claims of the Hindus, is not so much founded in greater learning or superior talents, as in strong prejudices in favour of their own countries, and in high conceits of their own abilities."

The real date of VICRAMADITYA's reign, is however still a desideratum in Indian History, and in spite of the learned labours of that profound and patient investigator Major WILFORD† we have yet to ascertain whether the voice of tradition be that of truth: the circumstance of AMERA's being cotemporary with him, depends upon no more positive proof, and there is some inconsistency in making the Bauddha philologist, the favourite and minister of a monarch, who is always described in the legends recorded of him as a pious worshipper of the orthodox divinities,‡ and the liberal patron of the regular priesthood: the age of the Amera Cōsha can scarcely be fixed within any very narrow limits, and we can only feel satisfied of its composition at some period long anterior to the tenth century, an opinion further warranted by the grammarian Vorabēva, who is generally assigned to the twelfth century,* and who enumerates AMERA amongst the eight old grammarians,† an epithet he would no more have attached to a writer, but two or three centuries anterior to himself, than any grammarian of the present day, would think of giving to BHATTOJĠ DĠCSHITA, who compiled the Caumudi about 200 years ago : Amera Sinha may therefore be left agreeably to tradition to the beginning of the Christian era, or, as connected with other traditionary notices of names and events, which I shall proceed to describe, he may be brought down to a later date, and placed about the middle or end of the fifth century after CHRIST.

‡ The Jains I am informed consider Vicramāditya to have been of their persuasion; in the Vithalcathā, Sinhāsang, Dvātrins'ati, and Vetāla Panchavins'ati, he always appears as the worshipper of DURGĀ or DEVĪ especially.

In the verse which specifies the names of the nine gems, and which I have inserted above, we find the name of the astronomer VARAHA MIHIRA, who according to this authority is therefore cotemporary with AMERA SINHA: this astronomer, upon grounds similar to those on which Mr. BENTLEY reduced the antiquity of AMERA, has accordingly been placed by him,‡ in the eleventh century: an opinion contrary to the general belief, and one which there is every reason to conclude is far from correct.

From astronomical data derived from the work of VARAHA MIHIRA,§ the Vrihat Samhitā, it appears that an antiquity must be assigned to this author of either, 1216 or 1440 years, reckoning from A. D. 1800; the mean of this is assumed by Mr. COLEBROOKE, or A. D. 472, as being the probable era of his existence, and as agreeing sufficiently with the date usually given him, or A. D. 499, and not far from that contained in a list of astronomical writers prepared at Oujein, or A. D. 505-6: according to the same authority,|| he is also named in the Pancha Tantra, the original of the Hitopadésa, and which was translated into Persian, in the reign of NUSHIRVAN in the latter part of the sixth, and beginning of the seventh century, and this early notice is a decisive confirmation of the accuracy of the above date: it seems therefore to be ascertained with as much precision as the subject admits, that an astronomical writer denominated VARAHA MIHIRA did flourish at Oujein in the course of the fifth century of our era; and it is farther possible that he was cotemporary with a prince named VICRAMA DITYA, and the subject of our Researches.

In Major WILFORD's elaborate essay on VICRAMADITYA* and SALIVAHANA; he has succeeded in disentangling from the perplexity occasioned by the repetition of names, and the confusion of dates, three princes of great power and celebrity, who were all known under the former appellation: the first of these, is the sovereign, from whom the era in use is denominated, and whose claims to be the patron of the nine gems, we are contented to leave undetermined; the second VICRAMA† is the same with SRĪ CARNĀ DĒVA, called also SUBRACA and SUBACA and ADITYA;‡ he began his reign A. D. 191, and this date agrees with the age of an elder VARAHA MIHIRA, placed by the astronomers of Oujein in the year of CHRIST 200;§ his capital is called Charchitā or Charchitā Nagara, || the city of investigation, as the struggle between the original Hindu system, and the innovation of the Bauddhas and others, is supposed to have commenced there and at this time; as SRĪ CARNĀ DĒVA, however, was the sovereign of Magadhā or Behar, and resided at a place now called Jangira ¶ half way between Mongir and Bhāgalpore, it is impossible that Charchitā Nagara, could be the same as Ujjayini or Oujein, in which city alone we are to look for the patron of the nine gems, and this prince consequently cannot be the VICRAMADITYA, in question. The third VICRAMADITYA, has better claims;* he is not designated by any other name or title; his capital was Oujein, and his reign began in 441; a date that accords with the existence of AMERA, as the cotemporary of VARAHA MIHIRA in the fifth century, and with his being implicated in the changes, which the temporary ascendancy of the Brahmans, apparently began about that time to effect in Hindustan.

The persecution of the followers of BUDDHA by the Brahmanical order, is a subject on which both sects are agreed; one of the earliest and most harmless effects of it, it is generally believed, was the anathematising of the Bauddha works, and amongst them, of the compositions of AMERA, all which consequently perished with the exception of his vocabulary:† as the persecution is thus restricted to AMERA's literary existence, we may infer his personal exemption from its fury by his existence prior to that event, and by ascertaining therefore the time of its commencement, we may be able to add another conjecture to those we have formed of our author's age.

Celebrated as is the persecution, and temporary suppression of the Bauddha heresy, it is an occurrence of which the date is as uncertain as of any other event in Hindu history: its institution is generally attributed to SANCARA KCHĀRYA,‡ and with his age therefore must originate our enquiry.

The birth of SANCARA, presents the same discordance of opinion as every other remarkable incident amongst the Hindus. The Kudali Brahmins, who form an establishment following and teaching his system, assert his appearance about 2000 years,* since; some accounts place him about the beginning of the Christian era,† others in the third or fourth century‡ after; a manuscript history of the kings of CONGA, in Colonel MACKENZIE's collection, makes him cotemporary with TIRU VICRAMA DEVA CHACRAVERTI, sovereign of Seandapura in the Dekhin A. D. 178: at Sringagiri, on the edge of the Western gauts, and now in the Mysore territory, at which place he is said to have founded a College that still exists, and assumes the supreme control of the Smārtal Brahmins of the Peninsula, an antiquity of 1600 years is attributed to him, and common tradition makes him about 1200 years old: the BHŪJA PRABANDHA enumerates S'ANCARA amongst its worthies, and as contemporary with that prince, his antiquity will be between eight and nine centuries: the followers of MADHWA CHĀRYA in Tulava seem to have attempted to reconcile these contradictory accounts, by supposing him to have been born three times; first, at Sivuli in Tulava about 1500 years ago, again in Malabar some centuries later, and finally, at Paḍucachay-tra in Tulava no more than 600 years since; the latter assertion being intended evidently to do honor to their own founder, whose date that was, by enabling him to triumph over S'ANCARA in a suppositions controversy: the Vaishnava Brahmins of Madura say that S'ANCARA appeared in the ninth century of SALIVAHANA or tenth of our era;§ Dr. TAYLOR thinks that if we allow him about 900 years, we shall not be far from the truth,¶ and Mr. COLEBROOKE is inclined to give him an antiquity of about 1000 years;* this last is the age which my friend RAMMOHUN ROY, a diligent student of S'ANCARA's works, and philosophical teacher of his doctrines, is disposed to concur in, and he infers, that "from a calculation of the spiritual generations of the followers of S'ANCARA SWAMI from his time up to this date, he seems to have lived between the seventh and eighth centuries of the Christian era;" a distance of time agreeing with the statements made to Dr. BUCHANAN in his journey through S'ANCARA's native country, Malabar,† and in union with the assertion of the Cérala Utpatti, a work giving an historical and statistical account of the same province, and which according to Mr. DUNCAN's citation of it, mentions the regulations of the casts of Malabar by this philosopher, to have been effected about 1000 years before 1798:‡ at the same time it must be observed that a manuscript translation of this same work, in Colonel MACKENZIE's possession, states S'ANCARA A'CHĀRYA to have been born about the middle of the fifth century, or between thirteen and fourteen hundred years ago, differing in this respect from Mr. Duncan's statement,* a difference of the less importance, as the manuscript in question, either from defects in the original or translation, presents many palpable errors, and cannot consequently be depended upon: the weight of authority therefore is altogether in favour of an antiquity of about ten centuries, and I am disposed to adopt this estimate of S'ANCARA's date, and to place him in the end of the eighth and beginning of the ninth century of the Christian era.

Although the popular belief, attributes the origin of the Bauddha persecution to S'ANCARA ACH'ARYA, yet in this case we have some reason to distrust its accuracy: opposed to it, we have the mild character of the reformer, who is described as uniformly gentle and tolerant, and, speaking from my own limited reading in Védānti works, and the more satisfactory testimony of RAMMOHUN ROY, which he permits me to adduce, it does not appear that any traces of his being instrumental to any persecution, are to be found in his own writings, all which are extant, and the object of which is, by no means the correction of the Bauddha or any other schism, but the refutation of all other doctrines besides his own, and the reformation or re-establishment of the fourth religious order: it is therefore probable that the Brahmans enjoyed the ascendancy in his times, and that the violent suppression of any powerful sect, had considerably preceded the appearance of his peaceable system of worldly privation, and abstract devotion.

Many works in celebration of this distinguished character, and in commemoration of his triumph over the errors of all other systems of theology, have been composed, entitled Sancara vijaya, or Sancara-jaya: they profess to narrate the most remarkable incidents of the reformer's life, and the different disputes held by him with his principal opponents: one of these I have examined: it is the work of MA'DHAVA, a commentator on the Védas agreeably to the Védānti notions, and a writer of great celebrity: he is known to have lived about the year 1300, by his making mention of SANGAMA, the father of BUCCA RAYA and HARIHARA,† the founders of Vijayanagar: according to his own statement, his work is but the substance of a much older performance, प्राचीनं शङ्करविरचितं सारसंगृह्यते स्फुटं ॥ and he speaks of SANCARA as being celebrated by all the ancient writers, सुतोषि संयत्कविभिः पुराणैः / confirming therefore, at the least the antiquity, I have above assigned to that theologian.

* The manuscript agrees however with Mr. DUNCAN's statement in one important particular; the admission of S'ANCARA's living in the time of the Malabar Prince CHERUMAN PERUMAL, a Prince, who from his connection with the Malabar Christian Church has been long an object of attention to the Scholars of the west: according to SCALIGER (De emendatione temporum 525,) Calicut was founded in 907, and this event is ascribed to that Prince by ASSEMANNUS (Bibl. Oriën. Tom 3. Part 2d 341 et seq.) but who observes, that according to VISCHERUS, it took place much earlier, or in 825. CHERUMAN PERUMAL is said to have granted many privileges to the Christians, inscribed on plates of copper, of which DU PERRON procured copies, (Zend. Dis. Prel. clixviii. and note) and which according to him corroborate the account of this transaction derived from ASSEMANNUS: this date will therefore nearly confirm the above view of S'ANCARA's age and give us about ten centuries for his antiquity.

† Asiatic Researches IX. 414. In addition to the instances there specified it may be observed, that SA'YANA the author of the Mādhyāya Dhātu Vritti calls himself the uterine brother of MA'DHAVA and the son of MA'YANA (?), the prime minister of SANGAMA, the son of GANPA, monarch of the eastern, southern, and western seas, or in fact of the Peninsula of India इति पूर्वदक्षिणोत्तरमस्तु द्वावीश्वरकर्मरजाकुलसंक्रमरजामहान्निखामावणपुत्रेणमाधवसहोदरेणसयसाचार्येणविद्वान्माधवाचार्येण॥ end of the first section.

As far as the Sancara Vyaya of MADHAVA can be admitted as an authority, and it is much too poetical and legendary to be so acknowledged, without very great limitation, we may draw the same conclusion that is to be inferred from SANCARA's own compositions, that it is a popular error to ascribe to him the work of persecution: he does not appear at all occupied in that odious task, nor is he engaged in particular controversy with any of the Bauddhas: the more prominent objects of his opposition are the Mīmāṃsacas as represented by MAN'DANA MISRA, with whom he holds a long and rather acrimonious discussion, and the Naiyāyikas and Sāṅch'yas, and the vulgar sects of Vaishnavas and Saivas are alike the objects of his opposition; he is especially hostile to the latter, and particularly to the Cāpālicas, a class of Śrīva's worshippers, who again are his most active enemies, and on one occasion assail his existence. He comes in personal contact with the Bauddhas, indeed, according to our authority, in but two instances: the first is a short conference with an Arhata, who advocates the Mādhyamika doctrines, or those of a Bauddha sect, and which is held in the Bāhlica country, a region identified by name and geographical position with the modern Balkh, and the second happens in Cashmir, where amongst the many sects who oppose SANCARA's access to the temple of SARASWATI, a short time before his death, the Bauddhas make their appearance: besides the positive conclusion presented by these circumstances that SANCARA was not engaged actively in any personal conflict with the followers of the Bauddha schism, we derive from them a very probable conjecture, as to the situation of the Bauddhas in the time at which MADHAVA flourished, and as he places them no nearer than in Cashmir and Khorasan, it appears likely that some period prior to his date, was the epoch at which the Bauddha faith was compelled to retire from its native seats towards those northern regions in which it still prevails.

The persecution of the Bauddhas is ascribed by MADHAVA to another reformer, CUMARIL BHATT'A, the predecessor of SANCARA: according to our author CUMARIL BHATT'A, was an incarnation of CARTICEYA the object of whose descent was the extirpation of the Saugatas, and in consequence of whose miraculous victory over his heretical antagonists, the prince SUDHANWA issued the fatal order to that effect:

आसेतोऽपनुषादे बौद्धानां बुद्धबालकां न हन्तियः सहजव्यो भृत्या नित्यं नृणां ॥

"The king thus commanded his attendants; let those who slay not, be slain, the old man amongst the Bauddhas and the babe, from the bridge of RĀMA to the snowy mountains.

The priority of the Bauddha persecution by CUMĀRIL BHATTA to the age of SĀNCARA is further corroborated by the manuscript account of Malabar, the Cerala Utpatti, which I have already adverted to: according to this authority, the establishment of this teacher in Malabar, local testimonies of which it is said existed when the work was written, took place about a century before the birth of SĀNCARA, and occasioned the entire expulsion of the Baudemar or Bauddhas, from that kingdom, and we find on that side of India other accounts confirming this fact, and that the Brahmans of Tulava who were originally followers of BHATTA ACHARYA, the same with CUMĀRIL BHATTA, assert his having had great success against the heretical sects some time before SĀNCARA, who is represented as having disputed with, and converted the followers of BHATTA's particular doctrine.*

As the Bauddha sect according to MĀDHAVA was annihilated by CUMĀRIL BHATTA, it would have been a work of supererogation to commit the same task to SĀNCARA, and we have therefore further reason to doubt his ever having engaged in it at all, much more his having been the author and chief agent of the persecution: as indeed his reform is rather addressed to the admitted systems of theology, than to those considered heterodox, we must conclude, that these latter had really suffered some temporary or partial discomfiture, so long prior to the age of SĀNCARA ACHARYA, as to have left time for the introduction and diffusion of various attempts towards the reformation of the orthodox faith, in the same manner as the innovations of WICKLIFFE and HUSS preceded by a considerable interval the more successful efforts of LUTHER and CALVIN.

According to the authority of MĀDHAVA and that of tradition, CUMĀRIL BHATTA, committed himself to the flames in the presence of SĀNCARA ACHARYA: they would consequently be regarded as contemporary: we need not however lay much stress on these accounts, especially as VYĀSA and JAİMİNĪ, nay, even AGASTYA are all manifest personally to our reformer, if we are to give credit to our guide, and as according to other authorities, CUMĀRIL BHATTA was the pupil of JAİMİNĪ, the founder of the Mimāṃsa school of philosophy,† who there is reason to suppose is much more ancient: we can only therefore conclude generally that the triumph of CUMĀRIL BHATTA, and the persecution of the Bauddhas took place at some period, anterior to the age of SĀNCARA and before the eighth century; and, agreeably to the inference above deduced, at some period considerably antecedent, in which case the occurrence may be approximated to the date, we have thought it probable to be that of AMERA, or at least to the time, when his works might have required such celebrity, as to become obnoxious to a hostile and intolerant sect.

We have already had occasion to notice, upon the authority of Major WILFORD, that the capital of SURACA, whose reign began in 191,* was named Charchila Nagara, with reference to its being the seat of the earliest disputes between the orthodox and dissentient classes of the Hindus. The assertion rests upon the authority of the Cumârica Chanda, which in the prophetic style of the Purânas declares, that, 'In the year 3291 of the Cali-yuga (or 191 after Christ) king SUDRACA will reign in the town of Charchila Nagara, and destroy the workers of iniquity; and this, as Major WILFORD observes, points out a persecution in religious matters at a very early period; at the same time, we know that the utter extermination of the Bauddha sect in India, did not take place till some time between the twelfth and fifteenth centuries, and we must conclude consequently, that the contending parties, were for a long period too equally matched, for any permanent and vigorous persecution of either by the other to have taken place, and especially for some time after the beginning of the conflict. If therefore the contest began in the third century, and the temporary ascendancy of the Brahmans was established some time before the eighth, we may conjecture, with every appearance of conjecturing happily, that the fifth and sixth centuries form the season, in which the Bauddhas were most actively and triumphantly assailed by the interested professors of the orthodox creed.

The time thus made out for the height of the Bauddha persecution, agrees in a very remarkable manner, with the date of events, recorded in the countries, where the faith of BUDDHA now predominates, and which were intimately connected with the condition of his Indian votaries in their native realms. It was early in the sixth century, (A. D. 519),† that CHINA received from India the prophet DHARMA, who gave a new impulse to the worship of BUDDHA, then languishing in that country and fixed it as the national faith. In 580 the religion of BUDDHA was introduced into Corea; in 540-50 into Japan, and the year 572 was remarkable, for the arrival in that kingdom, of an immense number of Priests and Idols, who came from countries beyond the sea: we may conclude this branch of our enquiry, by citing the opinion of the able historian of Java, Sir THOMAS RAFFLES, that the Bauddha religion was introduced into that island during the sixth and seventh centuries, and that the same period was remarkable, for the arrival of numerous Hindu emigrants on Java, and the eastern islands.*

* Asiatic Researches X. 91. † KÖMPFER'S Japan, B. 2. Chap. 4. The first introduction of the Bauddha faith into China took place much earlier; according to DE GUIGNES A. D. 65; but he adds, on n'eut alors qu'une idée confuse de la Religion de Fo, et ce n'est que dans la suite, qu'elle a été plus en vogue; he also notices 'la protection singuliere' which the Dynasty of the Leam that reigned from 549 to 557, gave to the Religion of Fo.

The examination I have thus instituted into the age of AMERA SINHA, has extended itself to limits, no doubt disproportioned to the importance of the enquiry: I had, however, to correct error, and to controvert prejudice, as well as to contend with the natural difficulties of the subject, and to support my averments by the best authorities within my reach: as to the result of the research, I shall willingly, if convinced by worthy testimony, of having erred in my conclusions, submit to correction; those conclusions indeed are only positive within certain limits, and as the sum of the investigation, I have only satisfied myself with the choice of one of two alternatives; either, assent to the tradition which places AMERA SINHA in the time of the primitive VIKRAMADITYA, 56 years before the Christian era, or to the inference deduced from the contiguous position, of a number of persons and things, connected more or less directly with our author's supposed history, which designate the early part of the fifth century, as the time at which AMERA flourished.

Those notions which attribute an extravagant antiquity to the Hindus, are fully as absurd as those which deny them any antiquity at all: as I have combated one set of opinions, therefore, it would have been but just to expose the other, as epitomised in FRA. BARTOLOMEO's account of AMERA SINHA: to do this however it will be sufficient to cite his expressions, pausing only to observe that these absurdities, are the composition of a man, who lavished every term of abuse, upon the Angli Calcuttenses, then engaged under the auspices of WARREN HASTINGS and Sir WILLIAM JONES, in instituting the legitimate enquiries, which alone have displayed to European knowledge, the true extent and character of Indian learning, and which he arrogantly and abruptly denounced as vain speculations and idle dreams: after most gratuitously and ridiculously converting AMERA SINHA into Amera Ch'hina, and explaining that, to signify, librum cæli signa continentem, he proceeds, ita certe hujus vocabuli etymologiam et analysim mihi tradidit linguæ Samscrdamicæ peritissimus vir, Ciangra Aashan, atque alucinatos fuisse puto Calcuttenses Anglos qui AMERASINHA philosophum et VIKRAMADITYA regis Indici a consiliis virum fuisse adstruunt, ipsique hunc librum nullo prorsus fundamento innixi adscribunt, cum tamen evidens esse videatur, librum istum unâ cum Idolatria Indica compositum fuisse, ac non solum totius mythologiæ et liturgiæ basim, sed primum librum precatorium esse, quo Brahmanes in ipso suæ idolatriæ exordio usi sunt;† elevating in this extraordinary manner, a common vocabulary, to the distinction of a Ritual and Liturgy, co-existent with the origin of the Hindu Idolatry, and the basis of the Brahmanical superstitions ! a blunder of another character, although of an equally absurd description, connected with the Amera Cōsha, has been committed by ANQUETIL DU PERRON, and has been adduced by Mr. MILLS,* with his usual want of knowledge and judgement, as 'a remarkable instance of the disposition of Brahmins to accommodate by falsification, even their sacred records to the ideas of Europeans : DU PERRON says: si je n'avois pas sçu que le commencement de l' Amarkosh contenoit la description du Lingam, peut' être m'eût il été impossible de decouvrir, que mes Brahmes, qui ne vouloient pas dévoiler le fond de leurs mysteres, paraphrasoient et pallioient plutot, qu'ils ne traduisoient : a description of the Lingam in the introduction to the Amera Cōsha ! DU PERRON's Brahmans must have been much astonished at the discovery, and at the perverse spirit and gross ignorance which converted, AMERA's account of the contents of his vocabulary, comprising the genders (linga) of nouns, into the mystical mention of an object, with which his preamble has no kind of connection, except the indispensable employment of a grammatical term, that happens also to have the same meaning, but which occurring where and how it does, the merest novice in Sanscrit literature could not possibly misunderstand : we have had too much of mere pretenders to knowledge in oriental literature, and it is high time to weigh accurately the real merit of all authorities on matters of Asiatic learning and history if we wish to gain any real acquaintance with such subjects, or if we retain the slightest veneration for truth.

The vocabulary of AMERA SINHA, though perhaps the oldest extant, is not considered as the first work of the kind : the author himself in his introductory lines mentions generally his having consulted other works, and his commentators particularise the Tricāṇḍa and Utpalini Cōshas, and the works of VYĀRI, RABHASA, CĀTYĀYANA, and VARARUCHI, as the authorities to which he alludes. The text of the work has been some time known in Europe though imperfectly,† and it is now placed within the reach of every scholar, by the excellent edition of it with a marginal translation, published by Mr. COLEBROOKE, and printed at Serampore, in 1808 : it is to this edition that my references apply : they will be found very numerous, and I am happy to acknowledge it as the guide and basis of my labours, and to bear testimony to its uniform and unrivalled correctness.

The different commentaries on the text of the Amera Cōsha, to which I have also made † DU PERRON carried two copies to Europe : it was also noticed in the first volume of the Asiatic Researches (354) : we have seen what BARTOLOMEO says of the work and he took home a copy of it. Several copies more or less perfect were presented by Lady JONES, to the Royal Society, and FREDERICK SCHLEGEL in his work Ueber die Sprache und Wissenschaft der Indier, notices a manuscript of it in the Royal Library, at Paris, with a Latin interpretation.

frequent reference, are the same as those employed by its learned translator—I was indebted indeed to his kindness for the copies which were prepared for his use, and which were the best procurable, and I have little or nothing to add to the notices which he has given of their authors.

The commentary which takes precedence of the rest by the earlier date of its composition, is that of CSHĪRA SWĀMĪ: it is a work of merit but concise; and the interpretations frequently differ from those given by the other commentators: the age of the author is not known, but he is one of the authorities cited by MALLI NĀTH the commentator on several of the most celebrated poems, and who probably wrote in the twelfth or thirteenth century.

The next in the order of antiquity is the work of MUCUTĀ or RĀYA MUCUTĀ MANĪ, compiled according to the author's own account from sixteen older commentaries to which he frequently refers: they seem however to be in many cases original compositions, and not merely glosses on the text of ĀMERA: the list includes the works of CSHĪRA SWĀMĪ, SUBHŪTĪ, HAD'DĀ CHANDRA, CALINGA, CON-CATA, SARVADHARA, RĀJADĒYA, GOVERDHANA, DRĀVIDĀ, and BHŌJA RĀJA, and the Vyāc'hya-mṛita, Tīcasarvasva, Mādhavī, Madhu Mādhavī, Sarvānanda, and Abhinanda. MUCUTĀ also cites the names of the principal grammatical writers, and quotes many Cóshas of which the titles are of frequent and familiar occurrence, amongst which, some as the Viśva and Médinī are still in existence: the commentary of RĀYA MUCUTĀ, is full and satisfactory—it is erroneous sometimes in the etymological analysis of grammatical derivatives, but it is in general accurate, and in most of the schools is of high authority: the date of the composition is inferred from dates mentioned by the author, 1352 Saca or A. D. 1430.*

The Vyāc'hya Sudhi is the ablest commentary on the Āmera Cósha, that has yet appeared: the interpretations are full and distinct, and the etymological analysis founded on the most thorough acquaintance with the system of PANINI: the commentator is also a very industrious corrector of the mistakes of his brethren, and rectifies especially the grammatical errors of his predecessor MUCUTĀ: in compliance with the usual practice I have referred to this writer under the appellation RĀMĀŚRAMA, but as is mentioned by Mr. COLEBROOKE, the name of the author is variously written in different copies and is sometimes the same with that which I have used, and is sometimes termed BHĀNU DÍCSHITA: in the copy I have used I find an apparent solution of this difficulty, and that Rāmāśrama or more correctly Bhadra Rāmāśrama is a title, implying the author's belonging to a particular class of devotees, whilst his real name is BHĀNU DÍCSHITA and he is the son, as he informs us, of BHATTOJĪ DÍCSHITA, the celebrated grammarian: I must add however that this is denied by the Pandits, who insist that the two persons are distinct, and that BHĀNU DĪCŚHITA, the son of BHĀTŌJĪ, was after his father's death, the disciple of the ascetic RĀMAŚRĀMA who is the author of other works. The work was written according to the passage which specifies the author's name, at the desire of CAṬṬSĪNĤ ruler of Mahit'har, a prince of the Bundhaila family, and the termination Sinh, we may observe, is attached to the Bundela and Ajmere princes* who make their appearance in the reigns of SHAH JEHAN and AURUNGEZEE, in the course of which, or the seventeenth century, a son or pupil of BHĀTŌJĪ DĪCŚHITA must have written.

The Vyākhyā Pradhā is a commentary by ACHYUTA UPADHYAYA: it is a work of little merit, being an unacknowledged abridgement of MUCUṬA's work. I have not been able to meet with any account of the author, but he is probably modern.

The preceding commentaries agree in giving the derivations of words conformably to the Sūtras of PĀNINI; those which follow have adopted other systems.

In the original compilation of the Dictionary, prepared as that was under the superintendence, and by the labours of natives of Bengal, the grammatical system used was that of VOPADEVA: as this is however of modern origin and limited application, it was considered advisable to discard it for the more generally cultivated method of PĀNINI, and the entire transposition of all the etymologies has been consequently included in my task: in effecting this object, particularly for all the words contained in the Ameṛa Cōsha, the preceding commentators were my chief guides, and RĀMAŚRĀMA's commentary especially has in these cases been consulted: the etymological analysis of many of the remaining vocables, depends upon the authority of the Siddhānta Caumudī, and that of the rest has been supplied by my Pandits or myself, in conformity, as exact as our acquaintance with the subject permitted, to the system laid down in the Sūtras of PĀNINI.

The commentary of BHARATA MALLA, is the favourite authority of the Bengal School, and of all others, in which the grammar of VOPADEVA is received: it is an able performance, and is particularly full on the subject of various readings: the author has also compiled a Cōsha on this topic, or a vocabulary of words which vary in their orthoepy, styled by the Hindus, a Dwivṛpa Cōsha, a compilation rendered very necessary, by the fluctuations in the forms of words, which arise from the arbitrary application of those letters that are considered interchangeable, and from the varieties introduced by different modes of pronunciation in different provinces, and caused, in many cases no doubt, by the blunders of copyists, the multiplication and repetition of which have given to different modes of spelling, currency and sanction. BHARATA MALLA is considered to have flourished in the middle of the last century, and has written commentaries on many celebrated compositions.

The Sāra-Sunderi is a commentary which has been occasionally consulted: the author is MTA'HURESA, who has himself compiled a vocabulary, the Sabda Retnāvali, in speaking of which, we shall advert to the few circumstances that are known of him: the commentary is a useful one: it follows the grammar of PADMANABHA DATTA, the Supadma, a work studied in some parts of Bengal.

The Padārtha-Caumudī, by NARAYANA CHACRAVERTI, has been referred to, though not frequently: the Calāpa, a grammar of celebrity in the Bengal schools, has been followed by this commentator in the analytical part of his work.

The Tricānda-Vivēca, by RAMANATH VIDYA VACHESPATI, a work of considerable merit, and particularly full on orthoepical varieties, will be found frequently cited, and this with two other commentaries, one by NILACANTHA and the other by RAMATEERCA VARSIA, which are sometimes referred to, complete the number of authorities accessory to the text of AMERA, which were employed by Mr. COLEBROOKE in his publication, and have again been made use of in the following pages.

Authorities of higher rank, though often of less value, than the commentators on the Amera-Cōsha, and constituting together with that work and its appendages, the bulk of the present compilation, are the vocabularies of original authors: of these the most valuable are easily and generally procurable, and many others it is asserted exist, though rarely to be found: those which I have been able to obtain I shall now proceed to enumerate, following as correctly as inference and conjecture will admit, the order of their antiquity, and furnishing such slender information respecting their authors, as the state of every thing like biography in India, is capable of affording: the comparative age of various compositions is in many cases ascertainable by the references which the writers make to their predecessors, and the absence of the notice of a celebrated work, where mention of it is likely to be found, is a very strong presumption of its not being in existence: the application of this test is very extensive, and conjoined with the information afforded by inscriptions, and that which may be conjectured from the legends of the Purāṇas, presents the only chance, of our ever being able to extricate the ancient history of India, from the labyrinth in which it is at present lost.

The first Cōsha after that of AMERA, in the copious list of authorities cited by the author of the Mēdini, which has been consulted in the following work, is the Abhidhāna Retna Ma'la of HELAYUDHA BHATTĀ: it is a vocabulary of limited extent, divided into five books; the first relating to Heaven and the Deities, and the second to Earth: the third to Hell, Water, &c.; the fourth to miscellaneous objects, and the last contains words of various signification: the author cites as his authorities, the Amara of VARAHMI, BHĀGURI, VEPALITA and others, (वर्णमालादिग्रन्थैः १); his work should be of some antiquity as he is quoted by MALLINĀTH, who is certainly prior to MĒDINĀCARA: his omission of the Amara Cōsha, from his list of authorities, can scarcely lead us to infer the priority of his own work, but it is possible, that the reputation of that vocabulary was not fully established in his time, and, that it is therefore included in the appendix Arī, or etcetera, added to his enumeration. *HELAYUDHA BHATTĀ has also written on Prosody, and there is a celebrated writer of the same name, on the religious ceremonies of the Hindus: in both instances honourable mention has been made by MR. COLLEBROOK of these works: he is said to be a Canara Brahman and the pupil of the Mimāṃsā writer, BHĀṬYA BHĀSCARA; if this last account is correct, he may be placed about the seventh century, as his preceptor is uniformly said to have preceded SĀNCARA ĀCHĀRYA.

AJAYA or AJAYAPĀLA, is the next in the list of the Mēdini, whose vocabulary has been consulted in the following pages: this is a work of small extent, but of considerable authority: it is confined to the Nāṇārt̥ha, or words of various meanings, and they are arranged according to the initial letters: the author does not specify his authorities, nor does he furnish us with any clue to his age or history: from his introductory stanza, he appears to be a sectary, probably a Jaina† the work is often cited by the commentators on the Amara Cōsha.

The next in the list of the Mēdini, is the Dharaṇī Cōsha or vocabulary of DHARAṆĪ DĀṬ, an author, of whom we know nothing further, except that he is considered as a Brahman of Canary, and the author of a poetical work, denominated the Cāśī Kīrṇāvalī: the vocabulary is of some extent, although it is limited to words of various meanings, arranged according to their final letters and number of syllables: the author specifies no authorities, and states only generally that his vocabulary is compiled from older writers: he is himself of some antiquity, as besides the place he holds in Mēdini's list, he is often cited by MALLINĀTHA.

* Asiatic Researches VII. 233 and X. 393.

† In a paper in the Transactions of the Literary Society of Bombay, by LIEUTENANT MACKENZIE, which I shall again have occasion to notice, an AJEE PĀL occurs, who seems to have taken an active part in the introduction of the Jaina Religion into Guzerat, towards the end of the twelfth century, and who may have been the compiler of the vocabulary, or the patron of its author, who consequently ascribes it to him; a practice frequent in the literary flattery of Hindu writers.

The Tricāṇḍa Śeṣha, is a vocabulary, in three chapters, composed purposely as a supplement to the vocabulary of AMERA, and thence sometimes termed the Amera Śeṣha; it follows a similar arrangement, and adds a number of words of comparatively rare occurrences. The author was a Juina, named PURUSHOTTAMA DEVA, and he is the author also of several other philological compilations as an Ēcācshara Cōsha or vocabulary of monosyllabic words, which I have occasionally referred to, and the Verna Viplava Nāsa, or a collation of various readings: his most celebrated work, however, after the Tricāṇḍa, is the following, which indeed takes precedence of it in the list of the Médini.

The Hārāvālī, is a collection almost exclusively of uncommon words: it is divided into two parts, the one containing synonymous words, and the other words of various meanings: the first part is again divided into three portions, according to the extent of the synonymes, and their recapitulation through a whole stanza, or a half, or a quarter; the work is of very limited extent, but it is the produce, according to the author's own averment, of twelve years reading; he states also, that it was compiled at the suggestion, and with the aid of his spiritual preceptor, ŚRĪ DHṚTĪ SĪNH, an Atī'hi or religious ascetic, known in the spoken dialects by the appellation Atit, and he mentions JANAMEJAYA, a Pāṇḍit, as having contributed to the compilation: the authorities he alludes to, are mostly of a general and miscellaneous description, but amongst them he enumerates, as the Cōshas consulted, and consequently prior to his time, the Sabdārnava, Utpalini, ŚANSAKRAVERTA and those of VĀCHESPATI VYĀSA and VICRAMĀDITYA: the age of PURUSHOTTAMA according to the order of the Médini, should be earlier than that of the Viśva, and he may probably have written in the tenth or eleventh century: he is not however quoted by the commentator MALLINĀTH, who cites the Viśva Cōsha.

After the Tricāṇḍa Śeṣha, we have in the Médini's list, a work entitled the Retna Māla, I have employed a Cōsha of this name, but I am not quite confident of its being the same; the Retna Māla of IRUGAPA, entitled Danḍāḍi Nātha, said to imply, as it may signify, a military officer of high rank, and probably the patron rather than the author of the work: it is a compilation of considerable authority, especially in the South of India, and its age may be ascertained with tolerable precision, for it is said to have been undertaken at the desire of HARIBHARA, a prince, who conjointly with BUCCA RAYA,* his brother, founded the city of Vidyanagar or Bijnagar, about 1340 and reigned there till 1350. The name of its supposed author IRUGAPA occurs also in an inscription in the MACKENZIE'S collection, as grantor of the village of Bellagola to a Jaina Deity, which grant is dated in the Saca year 1284 or A. D. 1362. The vocabulary I have referred to, may be possibly the authority alluded to by MEDINICARA, though it dates rather near to what we may suppose to have been the latter writer's own era: as the title of a vocabulary, Retna Māla (a garland of jewels) is very common; I have already noticed the Retna Māla of HALAYUDHA, and I shall have occasion to mention a third vocabulary similarly denominated, but confined to medical terms: the work of DANDADINATHA, is a vocabulary of words of various meanings arranged according to their syllabic length and final letters. The compiler does not specify his authorities.

The next work mentioned, and the original compilation of which the Médini is an improvement, appears in the enumeration of this latter, with the epithet Bahudōsham or very faulty attached to it. This is the Viśva Pracāśa Cōsha, a vocabulary of words of various meanings, of considerable extent and merit; and notwithstanding the reproach of MEDINICARA, a reproach not wholly undeserved, of great authority in the schools of Benares and Western India. The words are arranged according to their final letters, their initials and their number of syllables, but beyond these three points of agreement there is no classification, and the work is therefore consulted with some difficulty: besides the usual contents of a Cōsha, the Viśva Pracāśa includes some useful sections on the occurrence of the interchangeable letters, and on varieties in orthoepy, and the whole is frequently referred to in the following pages.

The Viśva Pracāśa, is of great value in the enquiry into the comparative dates of the various lexicons, which I have attempted to institute, being one of the very few compilations which present the age of their composition, and furnish us with a fixed point, from which we can take with something like confidence, a retrospective view: the vocabularies enumerated above contain no dates, and can only be placed at undefined intervals between the Amera Cōsha, and the Viśva Pracāśa, upon the authority of the Médini, confirmed as that is in most instances, by the enumeration of authorities which occurs in those works, and in which the name of the Viśva never appears: most of them are therefore, in all probability, prior to the year of Saca 1033 or A. D. 1111. which the author of the Viśva Pracāśa has given as the date of his compilation.

The author of the Viśva Cōsha, MAHESWARA is the most communicative of all the Sanscrit Lexicographers, and we are much indebted to the venial vanity, which has induced him to expatiate on his personal history. He informs us, that he is descended from SRI CRISHNA, physician to SAHASANCA, sovereign of Gadhipur, a name from which the modern Ghazipur might be supposed to be derived, but which is enumerated by the vocabularies as a synonyme of Canya cubja or Ca- nouj; SAHASANCA also is a synonyme of VICRAMADITYA, but neither time nor place allow of the persons being identified in this instance,* and some historical notices of the former, might possibly be derived from another composition, which MAHESWARA informs us he had written, the history of this prince; or the Sahasāncu Cheritra: the period in which the Visva Cōsha was compiled, was one very likely to have been a season of literary patronage at Canouj, as the Muselman princes of the houses of Ghizni and Ghor, were for some time, both before and afterwards, fully occupied with those dissensions, which gave the Indian sceptre to the latter, and consequently left the Hindu princes in the undisturbed enjoyment of their patrimonial sway, and tranquil exercise of their most commendable privileges: the author of the Visva cites most of the authorities considered ancient, and which are no longer procurable, but amongst those described in the preceding pages, the work of AMERA is the only one which he has noticed: the correctness of the date of the Visva is tolerably well confirmed by its successive citation in the works of MALAY NAT'H, the Médirni and the commentary of Rāya MUCUT'A, the last of which we have seen is little more than three centuries later.

The inference to which I have been led of AMERA's having lived in the fifth century, and the position of MAHESWARA in the commencement of the twelfth, leave us about six centuries and a half, for the appearance of the different vocabularies above specified, and others that have been less fortunate in escaping the ravages of time: the length of this interval appears to be far from disproportionate to the number of similar works, published during its continuance, as far as we can judge from analogy, for from the date of the Visva, to that of RĀYA MUCUT'A's commentary in 1430, or three hundred and nineteen years, we have but four vocabularies to enumerate, of which one only can be assigned to that interval with any certainty, and the other three may possibly appertain to the division of our subject which comprehends the works anterior to the Visva Pracāsa, or the beginning of the twelfth century.

In the period that elapsed between the ages of MAHESWARA and RĀYA MUCUT'A, we fix with certainty the author of the Médirni Cōsha, as he cites the one and is quoted by the other. The work of this writer is an excellent Dictionary of homonymous words arranged according to their final letters and their syllabic lengths, and then further disposed with alphabetical precision:

* As a mere etymological speculation I suggest the possibility of SAHASANCA, being a title of SRI CHANDRA DĒVA, who according to an inscription published by Mr. COLEBROOKE (A. R. vol. IX. 441.) founded the ruling dynasty of Canouj, about the end of the eleventh century, which "realm he acquired by his own strength." The inscription is unfortunately in England, or an examination of the passage in italics in the original, might be found connected with the name given to the Prince by MAHESWARA, or SAHASANCA, compounded as that is, of Sahasā, strength or violence, and Anca mark or distinction.

it is a compilation of great accuracy and high authority, and constitutes after the Amera Cōsha the basis and bulk of my labours.

The closing section of the Mēdini, recapitulates the authorities employed in its composition, and comprises amongst others, the fullest list of Cōshas to be met with : on this account and as they appear to be enumerated according to their supposed comparative antiquity, I shall here transcribe the catalogue, accompanying it with such information as to their present existence, as I am able to offer from my own knowledge or from the oral accounts of the Pandits :

1. The Utpalini, is one of the supposed authorities of the Amera Cōsha ; it is certainly of considerably antiquity, and is often quoted by the older writers : it is still procurable* though not common.
 2. The Śabdarnava, is often quoted by the commentators on Amera ; it is also occasionally procurable, but usually in an imperfect state.
 3. The Sansāra-avertta ; a vocabulary often quoted in works of an early date, but supposed to be now lost.
 4. The Nāma Mālā, though rare, is yet obtainable ; as it is said to be a work of considerable extent, in that case it differs from the short work of DHANANJAYA of the same title, which I have consulted.†
 5. BHĀGURI, is the author of a vocabulary, forming according to the commentators one of AMERA's authorities : the work is not to be met with.
 6. VARARUCHI, is also considered as one of AMERA's originals although as one of the nine gems, he should be contemporary with him : his vocabulary is not procurable.
 7. The Sāśvat, is often cited, and is said to be procurable in a mutilated state.
 8. VOPALITA, is the author of a Cōsha, to be met with in scattered portions.
 9. RANTIDEVA, is the compiler of a vocabulary, no longer to be found in a complete state.
 10. HARA, is another lexicographer, whose work no longer exists and who is rarely quoted.
- Of the above vocabularies most are cited by the commentators on the Amera Cōsha, and are specified in several of the works about to be enumerated, as the authorities which they

* My remarks on the possibility of meeting with these works apply to Calcutta and Benares particularly, and may be extended perhaps to the tract of India immediately along the Ganges as far as Haridwār : the state of manuscripts in the Dekhin is probably more complete, and it may be expected that the late accessions to the British Indian empire both to the west and north will be productive of many valuable additions to Sanskrit bibliography.

† One of them was probably the Nām Mālā of Du Perron which he terms Dictionnaire Samskretam a l'usage des Sciouras.

consulted: HALAYUDHA, PURUSHOTTAMA and MAHESWARA make mention of most of them also, corroborating therefore the order of priority in which they are placed by author of the Médini.

11. AMERA, the first author of the list whose work is every where obtainable.
12. SUBHANCA, the compiler of a vocabulary rarely to be found.
13. HALAYUDHA, whose work the Retna Málá has been described.
14. GOVERDDHANA, author of the Sapta Sati, or seven hundred miscellaneous stanzas, from which the idea of the Sat Sai, a similar collection in Hindi, may have been derived in the sixteenth century by BAHARILAL, is the author of a vocabulary said to be still procurable in some parts of India: as he mentions the Vrīhatcat'hā, of which the antiquity is supposed to be about 700 years, and is thus noticed by MEDINICARA, he probably flourished in the twelfth or thirteenth century.

15. RABHASA OR RABHASA PALA, is the author of a vocabulary often cited but rarely to be found.

16. RUDRA, an author of whose work the same may be observed.

17. AMERADATTA, the name of a writer or a vocabulary, often cited but not known to exist.

18. AJAYA OR AJAYA PALA, noticed above.

20. The Dharanī Cōsha, which as well as the following has been already the object of our attention.

24. The Viśva Pracāsā, forming with the Médini, twenty-five vocabularies, all prior to the fifteenth century, and of which my original and myself, aided as we were by Mr. COLBROOKE's valuable collection of manuscripts, have been able to procure no more than nine or ten: they are not however the whole number of works extant in the time of MEDINICARA, and his predecessors, which were either vocabularies themselves, or treated of the forms, inflexions, genders and meanings of words, in a manner that sanctioned their being included in the same class: thus the author of the Viśva Cōsha specifies SAHASANCA, the patron of his family as the author, the nominal one, it may be imagined, of a vocabulary, and works of a similar character are attributed to the Princes VICRAMADITYA and BHOJA: the former occurs amongst the remaining authorities of the Médini, along with works assigned to BAḢBHATTĀ, MA'DHAVA, VACHESPATI, DHERMA, VYĀRI, TA'RAPALA, CATYAYANA, CHANDRA, SOMA and PĀNINI; there are also other Cōshas, quoted by MALLI NATH and other early commentators, as the Césava, Yardava and Vaijayanti, the two latter of which are still found though not common.

The author of the Médini, gives us no account of himself, beyond his being the son of PRANACARA: his own name MEDINICARA, appears to be merely an epithet derived from the title of his vocabulary, but the same final syllable Cara is in Bengal, the denomination of a family of the Cāyastha race* and would indicate therefore his being a native of that province; it is also an appellation common amongst the Mahratta Brahmins, and our author is generally regarded as of that nation; if the MADHAVA and Retna Māla, he cites, be the same with those mentioned above, he could not have flourished earlier than the end of the fourteenth century.

Besides the authorities anterior to the Médini, I have employed many which are of more recent date: before describing them however, I shall here pause to advert to some of a doubtful character, and whose comparative age it is difficult to ascertain.

The most important of these guides and after the Amera and Médini the best work I have had access to, is the Abhidhāna Chintāmenī of HEMACHANDRA, a Jaina writer of deserved celebrity, and the author also of a series of Jaina hymns and of a Prācṛit grammar: as usually met with, and as as printed at the Sanscrit press of Calcutta, this vocabulary is divided into two considerable portions, one appropriated to synonymous, the other to homonymous words: the first part is subdivided into six books, according to a peculiar arrangement, and the first book is of great value as a detailed and faithful account of the superior deities or deified hierarchy of the Jaina sect. The second part is classed according to the syllabic extent of the vocables it contains, and they are then arranged according to their final initial letters; there is some reason to doubt however, whether HEMACHANDRA's original work is not properly limited to the first six books, and whether the Nānārt'ha part has not been added by some later writer.

The introductory lines of this author's vocabulary, explain the principles of his arrangement, and are confined to the first six sections, taking no notice of that on words of various meanings: again; this Cōsha has been commented on, and the commentary is equally limited to the first six books, and finally, with the exception of the arrangement which is peculiar to it, the second division of the Abhidhāna Chintāmenī is precisely the same as the Viśva Cōsha, following that in every word and interpretation, and repeating its obscurities and its mistakes: one of these works must therefore be a transcript of the other, and as there is every reason to believe the originality of MAHESWARA's work, it follows, that the Nānārt'ha part of HEMACHANDRA's vocabulary is borrowed from the Viśva.

* Asiatic Researches V. 66.

If the Nánar't'ha chapters be the work of HÉMACHANDRA himself, their being borrowed from the Viśva, establishes the priority of the latter work: on the other hand, as HÉMACHANDRA is quoted by MALLINAT'H, and as the Commentary on his hymns is dated in the year 1292, it is likely that he lived at a period not long subsequent to MAHĒSWARĀ, or in the course of the twelfth century; the accuracy of which inference, is confirmed by works current in Guzerat, that ascribe the conversion of the sovereign of that country, to the Jaina faith, to the influence of our author in the Samvat year 1230 or A. D. 1174,* and it is further corroborated, by the time falling within those limits, during which, the sect, of which HÉMACHANDRA was so distinguished a member, flourished in many parts of Hindustan.

The concurring traditions of the Brakmanical, Bauddha and Jaina sects report a two fold persecution of the second, by each of the others severally, although they are not agreed about the order of their occurrence: if I have conjectured rightly the priority seems due to that instigated by the members of the orthodox faith and they effected a partial suppression of the Bauddha heresy, about the fifth and sixth centuries; they were far from extirpating the schism, however, as the Bauddhas are noticed on the Coromandel Coast by the Arabian travellers in the eighth and ninth centuries,† in Guzerat by AL EDRISI in the twelfth century,‡ and we have a family

* About 2500 years from the first promulgation of the Parimath (Pārsmanāth) worship, Heema chaarge juttee (Hémachārya Yati) a follower of Parsow, much respected by the Shrawuks (S'rāvakas or Jainas) for his learning, and who had great authority in all matters concerning religion, resided in Puran Puttur, a celebrated city in the district of Neherwalla, which was at that time governed by a Rajepoot Rāja named GOONMAR PALL, who lived about the year of Vikramajut (Vikramāditya) 1230, or A. It is only necessary to add that HÉMACHANDRA is generally called by the Jainas, HÉMACHĀRYA, or as it is pronounced in several of the dialects, HEMACH'ARJ.

† Asiatic Researches I. 166. It might be questioned, whether this really proves what it has been supposed to establish, the Bod of RENAUDOT being possibly nothing more than the But (بست) of the Persians, or an idol in general: on the other hand, although the Persian term has that meaning, the word is not an Arabick one, and its occurrence in the work of an Arabick writer, renders it likely to be the representation of some particular Hindu deity; the turn of the sentence, also if rightly translated, is in favour of its being a proper name "Il y a dans les Indes des femmes publiques appellées femmes de l'Idole, l'origine de cette coutume est telle: Lors qu'une femme a fait un vœu pour avoir des enfans, si elle met au monde une belle fille, elle l'apporte au Bod, c'est ainsi qu'ils appellent l'idole qu'ils adorent, auprès du quel elle le laisse, &c.

The Nubian geography of AL SHERIF AL EDRISI, where this passage occurs, was translated by the Maronites, and published at Paris in 1619; the text of the original was printed at Rome in 1592; according to his translators, AL EDRISI wrote about the middle of the twelfth century or 1152; consequently the Bauddha faith preceded that of Jina in Guzerat, and was subverted there by the latter, soon after AL EDRISI wrote; a course of events very consistent with the view I have taken in the text.

of princes who appear to have followed the doctrines of Buddha ruling in Bengal, about the same time:* this seems to be their limit. I have already observed that MADEHAVA, a writer of the fourteenth century, places them no nearer than in Cashmir, and ABULFAZL† writing in the sixteenth century, under the reign of a highly tolerant prince, and assisted in his enquiries by ACBER's curiosity as well as power, declares that he had never met with a follower of Buddha, in Hindustan and had only encountered some old men of that faith in his third visit to Cashmir: later periods are out of the question, for in the present day I never heard of a person who had met with natives of India proper of this faith, and it does appear that an utter extirpation of the Bauddha religion in India, was effected between the twelfth and sixteenth centuries: by whom then was this important revolution brought about? I can not answer this question with confidence, but think it highly probable that the Jainas performed an important part in the event, especially as there is reason to suppose that the period assigned for the overthrow of the Bauddhas, was that in which the Jainas had attained in many parts of India, their highest pitch of power and prosperity.

An enquiry into the origin and history of the Jaina sect, of whose numbers and consequences so many vestiges still remain, would be inconsistent with the objects of the present disquisition and would in the actual state of our materials be but imperfectly and unsatisfactorily prosecuted something has been done towards illustrating the subject by Mr. COLEBROOKE, and Colonel MACKENZIE, and it is to the latter gentleman we must look for its further prosecution with an hope of success, as he possesses amongst his invaluable collection of inscriptions and manuscript many documents calculated to throw light upon the investigation: my own conclusions are at present in opposition to those views which assign a remote era to the commencement of the Jaina schism, and I am inclined to regard it as a scion of the Bauddha heresy, which sprang into existence during the early centuries of the Christian era, but whatever may be thought of the opinion, it may be confidently asserted, that the entire downfall of the Bauddhas, was preceded by several ages of Jaina ascendancy, and it may consequently be conjectured that the relative position of the two sects was not without its influence upon the final result.

The Jainas appear to have been in possession of the consciences and patronage of the Bairajas‡ from the eighth up to the middle of the eleventh century when VISHN'U VERDHANA v converted it is said to the faith of VISHNU, by RA'MA'NUJA;* the petty Rajas of Tutara or part of the sovereignty of VISHNU VERDHANA however still continued attached to the Jaina faith, and many temples, statues and inscriptions in the twelfth, thirteenth and fourteenth centuries were met with in that province by Dr. BUCHANAN: in a list of Colonel MACKENZIE's inscriptions which the liberality of the proprietor has enabled me to consult, I find also the eleventh and succeeding centuries particularly rich in grants made to Jaina establishments in the peninsula; I have already adverted to a grant made by IRUGAPA an officer of rank in the Vijayanagar court in the fourteenth century, to the Bellagola establishment, and we are satisfied that the sect professed considerable influence in that court by another document, which has been published, an edict promulgated by BUCCA RAYA, dated Saca 1290 (A. D. 1367)† the object of which is to effect a reconciliation between the contending parties of the Vaishnavas and Jainas, and in which it is declared that there is no distinction nor contradiction between the two religions.

The literature of the Jainas has yet been too little investigated, for us to be able to form any conjectures as to the period at which it especially flourished, but the few data we are in possession of, tend to corroborate the idea, that from the tenth to the fourteenth century was the season of the Jaina prosperity. It is said generally of PUJYA PADA, a celebrated grammarian of the sect, that he flourished about 1000 years ago, AMITA GITI a Jaina astronomical writer dates his work in 1050,‡ HE'MACHANDRA writes his grammar, vocabulary and hymns in the twelfth century, a commentary on those hymns is dated in the thirteenth, and there is great reason to suspect that the CALPA SU'TRA, the great authority of the sect in the north of India, was composed in that century also;§ we may therefore conclude that the patronage of these periods produced their due fruit, and was accompanied by the appearance and succession of many of the most celebrated writers amongst the Jainas.

The modern and present condition of the Jaina sect appear to be additional confirmations both of its late origin and recent prosperity. In the sixteenth century according to ABULFEZL, they were numerous and powerful, and the open and confident enemies of the Brahmans and their system. In the seventeenth a Jaina monument was erected at Bhagalpur|| the construction of which is attributed to the Rāja of Jayapur, and in the last century the Jainas could boast of such opulent and powerful members as the Séts of Murshedabad.^{*} In the south of India several corporate bodies of their priesthood still exist,[†] and in many places in the north and west of India they are yet numerous and respectable: their actual condition therefore although a fallen one, is not so far declined as to indicate a long period of persecution, and as contrasted with the utter annihilation of the Bauddhas in India proper, argues the more recent possession of influence and power, and renders it probable that those advantages were exerted to the detriment of their fellow dissentient sectaries, and contributed to their final expulsion from the plains of Hindustan.

* WILKS (vol. 1. 511) says in 1133 but this would make RA'MA'NUJA rather ancient if as there is reason to believe, that reformer was born about 1008; see Asiatic Researches IX. 270.

§ Besides other reasons for this conjecture, there is one that appears conclusive: amongst the subjects of MAHA'VI'RA's juvenile studies, the Lilāvati is mentioned, a work that was not composed earlier than the middle of the twelfth century.

|| The Pāduca of VA'SUPU'JYA; repeated copies of this inscription have established the date of the monument Samvat 1693 or A. D. 1637.

To return from this digression however to the immediate subject of our enquiries, the information that is obtainable of HÉMACHANDRA'S history; we find that little or nothing is known of him beyond his writings: if we may trust a work entitled the SAMAYA BHU'SHANA he was originally an inhabitant of Pátaliputra or Patna, and according to the passage we have already cited from the Transactions of the Bombay Society, he appears to have finally settled in Guzerat and to have performed an important part in the religious revolutions of that country.

Another of my authorities which appears to be prior to the Médini, though not therein enumerated, is the Śabda Málá of RA'ME'SWARA ŚERMAN: the chief reason for my inferring its priority to the Médini is its citation by MALLINÁ'TH, who is himself apparently anterior to the latter by his no where making mention of it, an omission of which so careful and excellent a commentator as MALLINÁ'TH unquestionably is, could scarcely have been guilty, had so well qualified a guide as the Médini been within his reach at the time he wrote. The Śabda Málá, is a work of limited extent and value, and is little better than a supplement to the Amera Cōsha, the order of which it follows, and to which it adds a few words of uncommon occurrence.

The Nāma Málá, is another of my authorities of which the age is uncertain: the title occurs in an early part of the Médini's list as I have already observed, but the work I have referred to under the name of its author DHANANJAYA, appears scarcely worthy of a place in that enumera-

^{*} Of whose immense wealth the author of the Seir Mutaqherin characteristically remarks, that when MIRA HASIN with a party of Mahratta horse surprised Murshedabad, and carried off from JUCAR SÉT's house two crore of Arcot rupees, this prodigious sum did not affect the two brothers more than if it had been two trusses of straw.

[†] As at Sravana Bellagola in Mysore (Asiatic Researches IX. 256.) and at Bidlery in Canara (BUCHANAN'S Mysore 3. 75.) I understand from Colonel MACKENZIE that there is also an establishment of Jaina priests at Chittamoor.

tion, as it is a very limited collection of synonymes, strung together without any order or arrangement: the want of order however is perhaps an argument in favour of its antiquity.

The vocabularies that remain to be noticed are all of a date subsequent to that of the Médini, and may be considered as posterior to the fourteenth century: the character I have assigned to the Sabda Mdla of a supplement to the Amera Cósha, applies still more forcibly to them, as they follow the arrangement of that work, repeat the whole or nearly the whole of its contents, and merely add to them a few new synonymes, varieties of reading, or terms of uncommon occurrence: the Nánart'ha chapters, present the chief difference, as they are very scanty in the compilation of AMERA, and as the Viśva and Médini afford great facilities to subsequent Cóshadras: as original and independant compositions they are consequently of little comparative value, and of inferior authority to the standard compositions which precede the fourteenth century: the principal of these modern works, and to which reference will be found in the subsequent pages, are the Bhúri Prayoga, Sabda Retnávali and Jat'adhara Cósha.

The author of the Bhúri Prayoga is PADMANÁBHA DATTA, the son of DAMODARA DATTA, apparently the same as the author of the Supadma, a grammar on an original plan, and the basis of a particular school in some parts of Bengal: he professes to render his work a supplement to the Amera Cósha, and accordingly divides it into three similar sections: he has furnished a few additional vocables, but none of much importance: as he enumerates the Médini amongst the vocabularies consulted by him, he is subsequent to the author of that work.

The Sabda Retnávali, is the compilation of MÁTHURÉSÁ, one of the commentators on the Amera Cósha, and follows that work in arrangement, and contents; it is chiefly useful for the introduction of various readings amongst the synonymes, but has made very little addition of any other kind: this work was composed according to the date in Saca 1588 or A. D. 1666, and under the patronage of a Musselman chief whose name as written in the man uscripts appears to be MURCH'HAN KHAN it should be more probably MUSA KHAN, a name common amongst the Musselman chiefs of the seventeenth century.

The vocabulary of JATA'DHARA, is for the most part a mere transcript of the Amera Cósha, and it is an impudent transcript, for the author acknowledges no authority: he probably thought the remoteness of his position screened him from detection, as he informs us, he was an inhabitant of Chát'ti gráma or Chittagong: he has added a few terms occasionally to those extracted from Amera, and for these his work has been referred to: the date of the compilation is not specified, but it is no doubt comparatively modern.

Some compilations have been made of late years, chiefly at the suggestion, and for the use of European patrons: of these the Śabda Sanderbha Sindhu, containing the words of the Amera Cōsha, Hémachandra, Viśva, and Médirī, was compiled by CĀSINĀT'H ŚERMAN, for Sir WILLIAM JONES: a compilation from those and other authorities, but left incomplete, was latterly prepared for Mr. COLEBROOKE by different hands, one of whom VIDYĀCARA MIŚRA, was for some period one of my assistants, and a very voluminous work the Śabdārt'ha Calpateru has been recently compiled for the use of the Madras College; the first of these is readily obtainable, and was purchased by me in Calcutta: Mr. COLEBROOKE transferred the second to me, and for the third I was indebted to the kind politeness of the late Mr. ELLIS, and of Mr. CAMPBELL: the first will be found referred to, though but very rarely, as it offered no additional matter: from the second, I have taken some meanings of monosyllabic words, which were quoted from the Ēcācshara Cōshas and of which the originals were not in my possession, and from the third, I have extracted a number of vocables for which I could find no other authority. This work would have been as valuable as it is copious, had there not been reason to question its accuracy, but the greater part of its references are wholly fanciful, and the Amera Cōsha is given as authority for very many terms, which it does not contain: none of these compilations have yet any weight or authority with native Scholars.*

The works I have thus enumerated are not the only vocabularies, I have consulted, though forming the whole number of those of which the contents and application are of a general nature: besides these, I have employed several medical vocabularies, which comprise besides, copious lists of plants and drugs, and include a small number of general terms: those which have been referred to, in the following publication, are the Retna Mālā, Rāja Nighant'u, Bhāva Pracāsā and Śabda Chandricā.

The only copy of the Retna Mālā, I have been able to procure, contains no specification of its date or author, although from the invocation we may conjecture, that the latter was a Bauddha or Jaina sectary: it is a useful list of the names of drugs both vegetable and mineral, with the common Hindu denomination appended, and is regarded as a work of some antiquity and authority.

* A compilation of a superior character to any of these modern works, and indeed to any of the more ancient work is now in progress in Calcutta: it is entitled the Śabda Calpa Druma, and is a Sanscrit Dictionary alphabetical arranged, with references to the authorities, and with copious explanations in the Sanscrit language: it is printed in Bengali character: it is the work of a young native gentleman of fortune and family, RĀDHĀCĀNTA DEB, with the assistance of the best Pāṇḍits, and is printing at his own expence, and is an occupation which singularly contrary to the low luxury, in which Hindus of his age and rank ordinarily expend their time, and money: the politeness of the author has favoured me with the first sheets of the work, but, I regret, it was not sufficiently advanced for me to benefit by its contents: he has also obliged me with many critical remarks on the earlier part of my own Dictionary of which where practicable I have availed myself: the Śabda Calpa Druma must take some considerable time before it is completed.

The Rājā Nighantū, is the work of NARAHARI, Pandita, who states himself to be descended from a family of Cashmirian Brahmans; from the frequent occurrence of Dakṣiṇī terms in explanation of his Sanskrit text, it is inferred, however, that he was an inhabitant of the south of India: besides the medical works which he refers to, he comprises amongst his authorities AMARA, HALAYUBHA, and the Viśva Prakāśa, and by his stopping at the latter, it appears probable that he wrote during the interval between the appearance of that work, and the Mādini, or some time in the twelfth or thirteenth century: the compilation is almost wholly limited to the Materia Medica of Hindu physicians, or the synonymes and properties of various vegetable and mineral products considered to possess medicinal virtue.

The Bhāva Prakāśa, is a compilation of a more general character, and includes the anatomy, pathology, and therapeutics of the Hindus: it is a very useful work, but not particularly full in the nomenclature of those subjects which come within the scope of the present publication, and is therefore not frequently adverted to: it is the work of BHĀVA MISHRA, the son of LATACANA MISHRA, and is about two centuries old; the copy I have used, and which belongs to the Library of the Asiatic Society, is dated in the year Samvat 1725 or 150 years ago.

The Sabda Chandrica, is a vocabulary of vegetable and mineral substances, with a tolerably copious list of animals, and a chapter on compounds both in medicine and diet: it is accompanied by an interpretation in Bengali, and is a useful work: the author is CHANDRA PĀNI DATTA, and the compilation is comparatively modern.

The list of vocabularies which constitute my authorities, is not yet completed, and I have to add to their number, the Dvirūpa Cōsha of BHARATA MALLA and Unādi Cōsha of RĀMA SHERMAN; the first of these is a collection of various readings, pointing out the different orthoepy of the same word, and is the compilation of a writer whom we have noticed amongst the commentators on Amera; it is not very frequently referred to in the following work, as similar varieties are abundantly furnished by the author's commentary on the Amera Cōsha, which afforded a more ready reference, and most of the examples, are also met with in the Sabda Retnāvalī, whence they have been likewise extracted.

The Unādi Cōsha, is an explanation of the irregular derivatives, formed with the affixes Un and others or Unādi, the construction and import of which being reducible to no positive system, they have been formed into a class by themselves: the vocabulary I now speak of, has the advantage of being elucidated by a comment written by the author, and I have therefore found it sometimes usefully consulted, but as the comment is constructed according to VOPADEVA's system of grammar, I have preferred, in all cases where I had a choice, the five Unādi chapters of the Siddhanta Caumudi, the entire contents of which, constituting a very full series of these derivatives, will be found embodied in the subsequent sheets.

Of the above works, the whole were employed in the original compilation, with the following exceptions; most of the commentators on Amera, the Nāma Mālā, the Rāja Nighantū, Bhāva Pracāśa, the Unādi chapters of the Caumudī, and the compilations I have particularised as absolutely modern: in the other instances, my only task has been collation, and whether the object of this collation was reconciling different readings in manuscript copies of the same work, comparing the differences of separate vocabularies, or correcting the inaccuracies of my original, it was a task of which the labour can scarcely be computed except by those who have engaged in similar undertakings: it can be a subject of little interest to the reader to accompany me through any detailed exposition of this part of my labours, or to follow the slow and painful steps, by which I have worked my way, through a path so intricate and irksome, often terminating in utter perplexity, and I have no doubt, in spite of all my care, frequently ending in mistake; to the Sanscrit student, however, it may not be unserviceable, to convey some idea of the condition in which Hindu manuscripts, and indeed all oriental manuscripts are found, and I may be perhaps indulged for dwelling with some complacency on a part of my labours, of the character and extent of which so little can be known to any one else. I shall therefore proceed to offer one or two examples of the different descriptions of difficulty, by which this province of my labours has been harassed and obstructed.

Of variations in different manuscripts of the same work, abundant specimens might be presented, but it will be sufficient to confine them to the Viśva, of which I had four different copies: one of these under the term अर, explains it by वेदन, another by छदन; three copies assign to केश as one sense of it शेषण, and a fourth शेषक, whilst there is reason to think that they are all wrong and that the correct reading should be ओकण; under the word भस्त्र, one copy has जालिक, another जानुका, and a third भिल्लिका, and in many instances the four copies present as many different readings, and every one erroneous: this is the case with the manuscripts of all the Cóshas, and it to be regretted, that the printed editions of those which have been published, are very far from correct, with the single exception of the Serampore edition of the Amera Cóska; printed copies however as editions multiply are likely to become more accurate, whilst from the carelessness and ignorance of transcribers in general, the multiplication of manuscript copies is only the propagation and augmentation of inaccuracy.

The varieties of reading presented by different works are still more numerous and embarrassing, than those I have noticed: thus under the word भित्ति, one of the interpretations occurs the Médini and Visva प्रदेश, in the Nānārtha Retna Mālā प्रदेश, and in Ajaya प्रदेश; under the term मन्त्र, we have in the Médini नामक, in the Visva and Hémachandra नामक; Jatādhara writes a passage उत्सिक्तमुद्रने, the Bhūri Prayoga उत्सिक्तमुद्रने; one meaning of रूप, as given by my original is written नामक, Hémachandra has it नामक, the Visva नामक, the Médini नामक, the Dharini कणिक, the Śabda Retnāvalī नामक, and the Tricāṇḍa नामक, Ajaya Pāla has नामक, the Śabda Sanderbha Sindhu नामक, and the Retna Mālā Nānārtha has माणिक, offering ten varieties in as many works on a word of three syllables, not one of which is satisfactory; differences to a like and even greater extent are numerous, and there are some instances in which I have had occasion to notice not fewer than thirteen equally puzzling varieties on one short word.* There is great confusion also in the genders of nouns, thus कच्छ in one passage of the Amera Cōsha is termed masculine, and in another is a noun of three genders, whilst again Muculā asserts that it is never feminine, and Mat'hurēsa, that it is an error ever to make it neuter: as to the various readings arising from confounding the different nasals and sibilants and above all from the

* As a specimen of my attempts at unravelling some of these intricacies, which may be amusing to those readers, who take an interest in philological riddles, I here subjoin the interpretations of the word बल्लूर, accompanied by the note which for my own satisfaction and for the better understanding of the subject, it has been my uniform practice in all such cases to prepare and preserve.

बल्लूर n. (र) 1 An abour, a bower, &c. 2 An uncultivated field. 3 A sand, a desert. 4 A field. 5 A compound pedicle. Hém. Nā. 6 A solitude, a wild. 7 A thicket, a wood. D'har. vide in loco.

Note: great confusion prevails regarding this and the next word बल्लूर, and the original has increased it by adding, a third word बल्लूर misquoting the Dharini for it, in which the reading is correctly बल्लूर; the authorities differ considerably, and there is reason to presume that not one of them is uniformly accurate in the interpretations of these two words; the following are the passages:

बल्लूरशब्दलक्षणे गहनेष्वपि ॥ Méd. बल्लूरकुशुमक्षेत्रेऽक्षेत्रेऽनभसि शब्दे । बल्लूरान्नक्षेत्रे वाहनोपर्यपि ॥ Hém. बल्लूरतु निज्जनस्थाने विन्दुसरे च बल्लूर । बल्लूरगहनेषु ॥ D'har. बल्लूरपुसि गहननक्षेत्रेष्वपि च S'abd. R. बल्लूरशब्दलक्षणे वाहनोपर्यपि Vis. खातुसरे च नक्षेत्रे बल्लूरगहनेषु Tri.

The first inference to be drawn from these readings, is that besides the meanings peculiar to बल्लूर it has those of बल्लूर also, and the next is that though बल्लूर may sometimes occur as a noun masculine, yet properly it is neuter, all the authorities agreeing in making it so except the Śabda Retnāvalī: for the interpretations; the Médini is wrong in बल्लूरक्षेत्रे which should be either शब्दे and क्षेत्रे or शब्दलक्षेत्रे, also in औषध which should be उपर from the concurrence of the Hém. Vis. and Śabda Retnāvalī, and the analogy of the other senses. Hémachandra seems the most accurate except that वाहन is put for गहन; the विन्दुसरे of Dharini is what? and its निज्जनस्थान though admissible is more probably निज्जनस्थान; the नक्षेत्र of the Śabda Retnāvalī is evidently a mistake for नक्षेत्र. The Visva has वाहन also where the rest have गहन being as usual the same essentially with Hémachandra. The Tricāṇḍa has उपर for उपर and चनक्षेत्रे for नक्षेत्र. The S'abdārtha Calpa Teru has under this word बल्लूर and औषधे for गहने and उपर and the S'abda Sanderbha Sindhu, misquoting its originals, writes वासन for the वाहन of Visva and Hémachandra.

perpetual interchange of the letters ṛ and ṛ̣ (ṛ and ṛ̣) they are innumerable, and of almost impracticable adjustment; the difficulty of separating them indeed seems to have been long ago insurmountable, and to have given rise to the following convenient rule, which renders their distinction a matter of perfect indifference:

रज्योर्लथोस्तदज्जययोर्बयोःपि ।

शस्योर्मनयोश्चान्तेसर्विर्गोऽदिसर्गयोः ॥

सर्विदुःकाविदुःकयोःस्वादिभेदेनकल्पनम् ।

"The letters ṛ and ṛ̣, ḍ and ḍ̣; ṣ and ṣ̣; ṭ and ṭ̣; ṣ and ṣ̣; ṭ and ṭ̣, a final Visarga or its omission, and a final nasal mark or its omission, are always optional, there being no difference between them."

Notwithstanding the latitude which this doctrine permits, the adjustment of these letters, and of ṛ and ṛ̣ especially, has occasioned me infinite trouble: I may here observe that the classification of words beginning with a ṛ or ṛ̣ which I have adopted, rests chiefly on the authority of the commentators on AMERA, and the chapter of the Viśva on the subject, extended by analogy to those cases to which their specifications do not apply.

To censure the faults of the original compilation with any undue asperity, would ill become one who is conscious of being liable to a similar accusation. BAYLE says, it is well in works of this kind, if there are not more than seven errors in a page, and, perfection in a Dictionary, according to Dr. JOHNSON, is the dream of a poet, doomed at last to wake a Lexicographer: both these illustrious men have likewise pointed out the difficulties, arising from the mere extent of an undertaking, as well as the impossibility of bestowing the same attention upon many objects, that might be devoted to a few; and the former has justly remarked, that although the first writers of Dictionaries have committed many faults, yet they have done great services, and deserve a glory, of which they ought not to be deprived by their successors: that errors would therefore occur in the original compilation, might have been expected, and they might also have been visited with a lenient spirit; they exceed however all reasonable limits, and it is, in justice to the encouragers and conductors of the work, as well as to myself, that I am induced to notice them: I have corrected at the least, several thousand mistakes, and I am confident, that had I engaged to prepare an original compilation, and not to collate and rectify that of the guide I adopted, I should have finished my task in less time, and with less trouble, in a more complete manner, and with more satisfaction to myself: the errors were of every description; words were inserted as original terms, which proved to be merely mis-spellings of others, and many were assigned to authorities, in which they did not occur: the etymologies were mostly fanciful, often erroneous, and not seldom invented to support a word, of the compiler's coinage: the interpretations were frequently most grossly inaccurate, and the passages quoted from the different authorities, constantly referred to those, to which they did not belong: there were also many faults of omission, and a number of words, even in the Amerā Gōsha, left out of the compilation: in short the book was put together, with an utter indifference to literary reputation, and a dishonest disregard of the duty, which the Pandits employed, undertook to discharge.

Besides the words extracted from the vocabularies I have specified, and to which an appropriate reference is annexed, a number will be met with, without such an appendage: these are additions of my own, consisting chiefly of useful grammatical derivatives, taken from the Siddhānta Cāsmudī, and a few law terms, from MENU, and the Mātācsharā; in the latter pages of the work, I have also inserted many words, which occurred incidentally in the course of such miscellaneous reading as my very restricted leisure has permitted me to indulge in: as improvements and additions of minor importance, I may here mention, that I have attached to the nouns the initial letters denoting the gender, as well as the termination of the nominative case singular; and I have referred by appropriate syllables, to the several authorities consulted: to those of my originals which have been printed, as the Hémachandra, the Tricāṇḍa, and Hārāvalī, I have subjoined the numerals, expressing the chapter, section and verse, in which the word is to be found, agreeably to the mode in which those Gōshas are divided; to the printed Mēdini, and the second portion of Hémachandra, and to the Serampore edition of Amerā, such a particular reference was unnecessary, the two first following a partially alphabetical arrangement, as I have already observed, and the last being provided with an alphabetical index, by which its contents can readily be consulted: for the manuscript authorities I have contented myself with the indication of the name, as indeed a more precise reference would neither be serviceable nor practicable: the abbreviations by which my originals are designated, will be found explained in a table accompanying.

I have now accounted for all the nouns and particles contained in the following work, and the only classes of words admitted into the original vocabularies of the Sanskrit tongue: to the European Student of Sanskrit, however, a Dictionary would be of little value, that should not offer any interpretation of the verbs, and particularly when they are identified, as they are in Sanskrit, with the roots of the whole language. I have therefore embodied the Dhātu Pāṭha, or catalogues of roots, with the other divisions of the general work.

The Sanskrit root or Dhātu, appears to differ from the primitives of other languages in its fulfilling no other office, and being incapable of entering into any form of speech: to fit it for this purpose, it must undergo many preparatory modifications, and it is then evolved with the aid of additional particles, into a noun or verb at pleasure: at the same time, as a matter of convenience, the Hindu grammarians have connected it more directly with verbal than nominal inflection, and in the classification adopted in their lists, it wears a more determinate shape, and may then be regarded as the crude verb.

The import of the Sanskrit root, is as undefined as its character, and it is in fact, only the general sign, of all the possible varieties of action or being, that are referable to a common nature: it is usually explained by a noun, and the noun most frequently is in the seventh or locative case: thus (भू) Bhū is explained, by (सत्तायाम्) Sattāyām, in being; (ह्रीद्) Hlād, by (अव्यक्तशब्दे) Avyakta Śabdē, in inarticulate sound, &c.: many roots also have a great variety of meanings, thus (अ) Av has nineteen acceptations, (क) Cal generally signifying numeration or counting, is susceptible of any meaning, a writer may chuse to employ it in, and this indeed so far applies to every other radical, that in derivatives, of which the form is clearly traceable to a root, of a very different signification, the difficulty is immediately solved, by the general law, धातोर्नेकाशेषान् that roots are capable of various interpretations: these varieties of sense, however, are either rendered perfectly intelligible in books, from the context, or they are explained in the commentaries, and most of the verbal inflections are of an application sufficiently precise: as to the individually exact import, of the root, it is of very little consequence, as although it may be a question, whether each should be interpreted by an abstract or infinitive noun, this uncertainty is removed at once in practice, by the conversion of the root into one or other form: its conversion into the crude verb, is the method I have preferred, and it appears in the following pages translated by the English verb in the infinitive mood, with which, however, it must not be confounded, as the Sanskrit root takes an indeclinable infinitive form, which corresponds in power, with our infinitive as designated by the particle, to.

The Sanskrit roots, as identified with crude verbs, are arranged in ten Ganas, or classes differing in conjugation through a part of their inflection, and consequently discriminated in grammatical works: the arrangement of the Dhātupāṭha is however alphabetical: the number of the roots can scarcely be estimated with precision, for, as crude verbs, they may be inflected in several of the conjugations, and they are usually considered, as then forming distinct roots; there are also many roots called Sautra, from being noticed in Sutras, or rules, etymological analysis, constructed for the occasion by authors of reputation, and there are many peculiar to the Vēdas, which as well as the preceding, are not always included in the enumeration of the Dhātupāṭhas: in general the number of radicals in the ordinary lists, is about 1700; as repeated in different classes they exceed 2000: in the following pages, the number is something more than nineteen hundred, and they occur as nearly as possible in the following proportions:

Class the first,	1020
———— second,	73
———— third,	23
———— fourth,	128
———— fifth,	29
———— sixth,	154
———— seventh,	25
———— eighth,	10
———— ninth,	59
———— tenth,	411

I do not mean to assert that these numbers are faultlessly accurate, but they are sufficiently so, to convey a correct notion, of the proportion of which the various classes consist: of the whole number, a very considerable proportion also are of rare occurrence.

Although the Sanskrit root is with a few doubtful exceptions, monosyllabic, yet as the crude verb, it often appears to consist of several syllables, by the annexation of certain supernumerary letters, which are rejected from every inflection, and serve only to denote the class to which the verb belongs; or the necessity of some peculiar modifications, in it, or its derivatives: these Anubandhas or adjuncts, or indicative letters, I have in general thought it unnecessary to retain; as on the one hand, the class is specifically mentioned, and its characteristic formation shewn, by the insertion of the third person singular of the present tense; and on the other, the appropriate evolutions of the most useful derivative forms, occur under the respective derivatives: I have however retained some of them, as the letter ṛ for instance, as not only accounting for some singularity in the construction of the present tense, but as sometimes furnishing a useful distinction between two roots, of otherwise similar form, and yet of very different meaning and classification.

For the roots contained in the following pages I am indebted chiefly to the labours of Mr. COLEBROOKE: those of the first and most numerous class are published in the first volume of his Sanskrit Grammar, but the other classes existed only in manuscript which he had the kindness to complete for my use. The accuracy of his compilation and excellence of his authorities, has left me little to do but to transcribe, and although I have consulted the lists in the Grammars Mr. WILKINS and Dr. CAREY, and in Mr. POSTER'S Essay, as well as occasionally adverted to the works of MADHAVA and YOPADEYA and the roots given in the Mugdabodha, and Camudi have found occasion to make but few additions to the copious and satisfactory catalogue Mr. COLEBROOKE had prepared: I have added to some of the roots however, a variety of modification of meaning, depending upon the addition of inseparable prefixes or prepositions, the application and effect of which in Sanscrit compositions are of a very various and puzzling character; it would be almost impossible indeed to collect all the shades of import occasioned by the use of the particles, the application of which seems frequently to depend upon the caprice of the writer: they are often also accumulated to eke out measure without regard to meaning, and leave the radical unaffected, a circumstance that forms one of the great objects of the commentaries by which all Sanscrit works of merit are accompanied, and without which, for some time at least, they will scarcely be perusable with any satisfaction: on certainty the examples I have given are taken chiefly from the Māgha, Bhāgavat Gītā and Mēgha Dūta; they are comparatively few however, and I soon found it vain prosecuting the collection, as far as poetical licence, or the नियुक्तः कवयः the uncontrolled poets, of Sanscrit Grammarians, were likely to lead me.

The whole extent of the Dictionary from these various sources is but indifferently proportioned to a language, which it may be safely said has no limit, and the extent will be thought still less, when it is found that it for a great part consists of the language of Botany and Mythology. For so great a portion being thus appropriated, it would be sufficient for me to say that it is the case with my originals, but there is a still better reason, and incidental reference to Deity by some of his many titles, and fanciful allusions to a flower or plant, constitute half, or more than half, of the poetry of the Hindus. Their mythology is the main structure, their botany the chief decoration of their poetical compositions, and I have no fear of being found by the student unnecessarily copious on these two themes: as far as affects my translation of the names of plants and objects of Science I do not mean to be responsible for its accuracy: Mr. COLEBROOKE'S Amera Gōsha has been my chief guide, and in other cases I have made use of the Bengali and Ooriya vocabularies published at the College, and of Dr. ROXBURGH'S Catalogue of the Botanical Gardens as published by Dr. CANER, with the Bengali and Hind names of a large portion of its contents.

Although the number of vocables contained in the Dictionary is comparatively scanty, yet in application may, with a little attention to the gēhās and gāṇās of the language, be almost indefinitely extended. Compound words not found in it may be easily resolved into their component parts, and those parts if not occurring may be traced to their radicals, and their import thus be ascertained; the obvious meanings of words as derivable from their etymology, though frequently not assigned to them by any authority, and therefore only not inserted, may of course be always admitted, and they may also be extended as epithets to other senses not expressed, to which their analysis makes them applicable; names of properties and virtues will often be met with used attributively, when their application will be easily understood; and the conversion of simple nouns into a variety of possessive and attributive shapes by the use of regular affixes will easily be conceived, by adverting to some of the analogous formations the work itself contains: as to the effect of negative and privative prefixes, and the addition of the abstractive terminations, there can be no difficulty in these respects, as the modified meaning is too palpable to be misconceived, and by attention to these points and by a knowledge of the elements of the language without which all attempts at study must be abortive, I trust the Dictionary now offered to the Public, will afford every desirable aid to the Student of the Sanskrit Language.

* This and its aspirate are the only defects in the system, as K and K'h are more correct representatives of the original characters; the misapplication was occasioned by the system being adopted to the Arabic as well as Sanscrit alphabet, and K being required to express the Kaf of the former.
